

Attention, Farmers!

As we do not have storage space enough to carry all the seed needed for the fall planting in this territory, would ask that if you are planning the seeding of winter grains that you talk this over with us some time before you will need the seed.

In that way your business can better supply you.

U. O. D. NEWS

Miss Leila Henderson, accompanied by her mother, younger sister, Lois, and a real live man, Cpl. Lietch, spent a pleasant week end at their home in Wallawa.

Casualty on the home front! We regret the unfortunate accident which occurred among our train crews resulting in S. E. Chapman, brakeman, breaking both legs. Here's wishing him a minimum of suffering and a speedy recovery.

After several months of sick leave William Woodard is back on the train crews.

Also a new brakeman has joined our group. Joseph Nelson of La Grande.

Our own Captain McCoy returned to us almost intact, except for a chronic bluish (or is it sunburn?) after a week end of fishing.

Following is part of a letter received by John Gillespie. Utilities, from his son Elmer, who is stationed somewhere in England:

"Dear Folks: Again another week has passed. Since today is my Sunday off I'm writing you this afternoon. Yesterday afternoon we went into town on the bus. Had to buy a tail light for my bicycle. I went through Woolworth's store. It is like ours in the states. Next month I will try to find something for you. Last night several of us went to a dance. I danced a few rounds but since I need more practice and they dance slightly different I finally gave up till next time. We rode over on our bicycles about five miles. I was tired when I got back and it is hard to get used to riding a bicycle at night anyway. Sure makes me nervous riding on the wrong side of the road, too. The girl I danced with was from London. She is up here for a weeks vacation. Guess it must be some relief from living down there. The girls are all interested in coming to the States. I still prefer our own girls. I got a letter from Marshall. We would have to meet in Manchester, since traveling conditions are so uncertain and it is a ways off. Guess we can't get together for a while. I haven't gone to Cambridge yet. Our fair weather has quit us again. Dreary, drizzling rain however, it isn't cold yet. There are so many cities here that our cities were named for. I'd like to go up to Boston to see how it compares with our Boston. Some of the places I've visited did compare with our cities in Mass. We've been marking up our gains in France on our map. Must close for this time. Love to all, Elmer."

We knew that last poem couldn't pass without comment but we didn't expect it from our own Mrs. Anna Myrick, who is quite the poetress herself.

Rail Transportation
 I suppose by now you have already read the little ditty by Zona Harder Well, true to her name, no one works any harder.

But, gosh blame it all, we can't let you think that day shift does it all.

It is true, there are nine desks all in a row.

But, at four o'clock, home all the day crew go.
 Capt. McCoy, Jeanne, Mr. Morrison, Joyce, Zona, Bonnie, Dorothy, Janet, Leila, and Marion.
 Well, until twelve forty-five, swing shift must carry on.

There is Millie, who takes over Joyce's desk, she types bills and documents till she is blue in the face.

At Zona's desk sits Peggy, who with Millie, keeps up the pace.

No one at Bonnie's desk or Dorothy's desk.

Then at Janet's desk sits Thompson; he rants and roars and pulls his hair.

For he makes a check then the cars are not there.

The Yardmaster then gives up in despair, goes up in the area, finds the cars up there.

That desk that is manless on day shift is occupied by Carlyle on swing.

His train crews take up empties and loads; also bring down empties and loads and everything.

They wind up their work at twelve forty-five, then for the time clock they all make a dive.
