A Fighting Campaign At White Heat

The political campaign is growing hotter day by day, and night by night. Ever since Roosevelt made his Teamsters Union speech, followed by Dewey's Oklahoma reply, the lid has been off for both sides to say what they please, and in whatever language they choose. The method dates back to the Cleveland-Blaine days and other old time campaigns when the white heat of virulency was turned on every candidate, high or low, and argument and dignity were given minor places to appeal to prejudice and personal and factional interests.

The effect of such a campaign is usually very stirring and more voters of the indifferent class or doubtful mind are brought to the polls than usual. It is somewhat like a fight on Main street when everyone rushes out to see who gets in the best blows. Then the onlookers go away and talk about it with keen interest, while the same people would pass up an argument on the corner involving leading principles of national welfare.

While the method cannot be wholly approved, the results of such a campaign, with its charges and counter charges, will uncover every feature of our national political affairs in such language that millions of voters would understand in no other way. They will at least be made mad enough to vote, and lack of voting has been one of our greatest weaknesses. We may depend on the largest vote in every state in November recorded in many years.

President Roosevelt and Governor Dewey, and their running mates, Truman and Bricker, are leading. They are supported alike by around 1000 candidates of both houses of congress and state candidates. The radios are full of it. The newspapers east of the Rocky Mountains are giving more space, and stream headlines to the campaign than to the war. News commentators are taking sides on radio and in newspaper columns, and the cartoonists are finding subjects to their liking. Labor and farm organizations are unusually active, and the interest is reaching down into county and precinct politics more than known in any recent campaigns.

Those of us who believe in a more normal campaign had just as well forget complacency and join in the sportsmanship of a good fight. One thing we can say, there are smart men on both sides, and they are doing a good job of the kind of a campaign we will have to the end. The result of their efforts will be in the lap of the gods and no one will know which way the voters will swing on election day.

F.S.A. WILL MAKE REPAIR LOANS

Farm storage of root crops, fruits and vegetables is adding from $50 to over $150 to the farm incomes of many FSA borrowers and saving garden produce, according to Amy S. Larkin, Farm Security Home Management Supervisor for this territory whose headquarters are at the Umatilla County office, John's Building, Pendleton.

"FSA families are finding that small pits, side-hill cellars and basements without a furnace provide the cool and moist storage required for beets, carrots, parsnips, turnips, potatoes, cabbage and celery," said Larkin. "Bins, boxes and barrels make the best containers."

Pumpkins, squash, sweet potatoes and most dried foods store best in a warm and nearly dry at-

Hard work demands good oil!

On the toughest jobs, Standard's RPM Heavy Duty Motor Oil will keep your tractor or heavy truck engine humming. Special, patented compounds, blended with the selected base oil of RPM Heavy Duty prevent rings from sticking and keeps oil passages open. Because of war demands, it's not sold for cars or trucks under 1/4 ton.

mosphere such as the attic or a storage closet in the house, where the temperature doesn't drop much below 65 degrees. Dried foods can be placed in airtight moisture proof containers on shelves or racks in the upper part of the room where there is the least moisture. The best types of containers for dehydrated products are glass jars with tight seals.

Cool and dry storage is being found ideal for apples, onions, dried beans and canned foods with a dry cellar or special concrete storage house usually providing the best place. Fresh air must be kept circulating to take away odors, lessen decay and prevent the produce from excess "sweating", it was explained.

FSA loans can be made for repairs and minor construction items to provide storage facilities if no other sources of credit are available. Plans for storage cellars and pits can be secured through the County Agent's office and any assistance possible will be given at the County FSA office.
