NARROW MARGIN MAY DECIDE PRESIDENTIAL RACE

If one follows the many reports on election prospects as given by radio, commentators, newspapers, poll takers, politicians on both sides, and the public debates of the leaders, the safest conclusion at this date is that the race between President Roosevelt and Governor Dewey is very close. It is balancing throughout a national survey on a pivot of one percent. The campaign is at a high pitch, and with nearly two weeks yet to go, the results may be changed greatly by small punches at the very last.

The fact that the president has changed from his original plan, and will make several purely political speeches in big centers shows that he is uneasy and the fact that Dewey is driving hard and beaming hopefully is assurance that he expects to win. Both are placing all their cards on the table for the voters to play with on November 7th.

Many independent dopesters say that the people themselves are not saying much and do not appear to be much interested. Jim Farley, who knows politics and trends about as much as any man in the nation, says, "There is something going on that I can't quite understand. This is a hard election to figure out."

The solid south of 11 states with 124 electoral votes, where they still vote against Lincoln as many others still vote against Hoover, is conceded to the President. The one exception is Texas which has a big anti-administration, anti-negro democratic vote, and a strong Republican campaign being waged. This state might go republican, but not likely. West of the Rockies, California, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico and Nevada are expected to give its votes to Roosevelt, with Oregon and Washington very close. These two groups would give the President 192 electoral votes. Colorado, Idaho, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, the two Dakotas, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, New York, Main, Vermont, New Jersey, Massachusetts and New Hampshire are claimed strongly by the republicans, and conceded close by the democrats. These would give Dewey 219 votes. The doubtful states are Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maryland, West Virginia, Illinois, Kentucky, Missouri, Oklahoma, and the big state of Pennsylvania, with around 130 votes. Southern Illinois is reported two to one in favor of Dewey, which is about half of the vote of the state and Chicago is supposed to go for Roosevelt, though the fight against Mayor Kelly may turn that vote. In the coal region the United Mine workers have declared for Dewey in open resolutions, and this may throw a plurality to Dewey in Kentucky, West Virginia and Pennsylvania. In Maryland, Baltimore is counted democratic while the Chesapeake bay agricultural region is rated strong for Dewey. Oklahoma and Missouri are claimed by both parties. New Jersey has a row in its democratic ranks and is conceded to Dewey. The negro vote which is large in New York, Ohio and Illinois, and strong enough to control a close election, is divided with several large negro newspapers lately announced for Dewey. Roosevelt received this vote nearly unanimous in 1940.

Twenty-six states have republican governors, and these states control three-fourths of the electoral college vote. The House of Representatives lacks only three votes of having a republican majority, and the incumbents are campaigning vigorously to hold their places, along with 14 senatorial contests, which, with the national campaign republican organization well greased and in full operation all over the critical areas, the race can be seen today with Dewey nosing out the old campaigner, his opponent.

Your best friend
when traveling

Maybe you don't see him every day—but he's a neighbor of yours—and a good neighbor. You know him as a businessman—but you should know him better—as a travel expert. Through these war years he has had many extra problems—and extra services to perform and he has done them well.

We, publicly, want to commend him for the loyal service he has rendered our company under trying wartime conditions.

If you have a travel problem, let him help you. He will serve you well.
