A word for the Thanksgiving Table

Thanksgiving days are here again. As we meditate on the various phases of gratitude to an all wise Providence, we must feel that the most important is our place in the affairs of the world. When the pilgrims established the day, it was one of celebration for abundant harvest and a new freedom of life and religious liberty they enjoyed. Wild turkeys abounded in the forests and this bird became the principal feature of a laden table, for which, along with the simple vegetables they were able to grow on the new lands, they gave praise to the Divinity that was shaping their lives and laying the foundations of a great nation.

Now, over 300 years later, we find ourselves defending their vision and faith around the whole earth. It is this faith in their vision and in our ability to defend the rights of men which we have demonstrated so well the last three years, so innate in our souls and so strong in our resources, for which we should give thanks and devotion to the same all wise Providence that they worshiped at their early shrines around the festive board.

Whether in the homes of all America, or in the camps of ten million soldiers, the thoughts must be the same. We are still living for and fighting for the same rights of freedom to worship as we please, to the same rights to say what we please, the same rights to free enterprise, the same rights to improve the private and general welfare, and to progress in our American way of life under the truest democracy on earth.

Our republic, established but a century and a half ago and founded on the principles of our earlier forefathers, now finds itself the greatest nation in the world, while nations many centuries old are crumbling because of the wrong theories of government. We now realize our greatest responsibilities to humanity, perhaps the greatest of all ages for one nation. This place in the world must be maintained by adherence to the simple principles of freedom of the first Thanksgiving days and the declaration of human right by the founders of this republic.

Our prayers should be, that when the captains and kings depart, we shall not become drunk with the sight of power, and loose wild tongues, but will retain a humble and contrite heart, and will still keep in awe the Lord God of Hosts. Let us thank God that we are powerful in that our principles of liberty and human rights have been justified, but let us also pray God that we may remain humble before His righteousness. Though paraphrasing the Immortal Kipling, let us not become one with Ninevah and Tyre, lest we forget our sound principles and the principles of the Prince of Peace.
