The Lesson of the Great City of Cologne

Cologne, one of the great cities of Europe, now lies prostrate. It was founded by the Caesars nearly 2000 years ago and has represented the advance of civilization down through the centuries. It was a center of government, culture, architecture, art, religion and beauty, as well as manufacture and business, and the general progress of Germany. Now all this is in rubble except its great cathedral and many fine homes in outlying suburbs which our air forces have protected. If San Francisco were laid flat it would be less than the calamity that has happened to the great Rhine city. And this is but a dot on the map of destruction on the map of Europe from London to Stalingrad. Thus is our boasted civilization doing to itself after a struggle upward since the Man of Galilee. It is a struggle of right against wrong in human relations, and we have a profound faith that the principles of Christian civilization will survive, and rise stronger after the battles for human liberty have been won.

And while this is going on in Europe, we of the most advanced nation under Christianity find ourselves contending against another—a paganistic sort of civilization as old, which believes that the Emperor of Japan is God. Doctrines and philosophies of government become almost useless as we contemplate the problems that face us. How mankind can work out a basis of lasting peace when human beings may live together toward a common good and a noble way of life, will require the use of all the good of all the ages, organized into righteous codes by the greatest minds and spirits of all the nations.

If you hesitate to give your utmost to the Red Cross, just stop and think, and talk it over with your neighbors, as to what the Red Cross is doing. We live still in comfort, but we know what the boys are suffering in prison camps, in hospitals, and the wounded on battlefields, and the angel of mercy that reaches them, on all fronts is the Red Cross. Our own selfish interests here, where there is plenty of money, should yield to this appeal.

Just to remind you that now is the time to plant a tree and then more trees. Only God can grow a tree but you can help spread its blessings.

How can a motor oil save gasoline?

Much gasoline loss is caused by gradual ring and cylinder wear. Gas mixtures then "blow-by," compression is reduced, performance gets rough. RPM Motor Oil slows this wear "way down"—sticks tight on hot or cold metal surfaces, insures cold motors against extra starting wear, protects critical hot spots on long runs. For more mileage, less wear—use Standard's RPM Motor Oil.
