School district unveils crisis app

By JADE McDOWELL
Staff Writer

In the event of an emergency, community members will have more information from Hermiston School District than ever before.

The CrisisManager smartphone application provides everything from push notifications to maps of emergency routes for fire drills. Mike Kay, director of operations for HSD, said three different levels of security clearance should allow parents, staff and emergency responders to receive the information they need in a crisis without compromising any of the district's security measures.

"It's just another step to provide as much accurate information as quickly as possible," he said.

For parents and students,

To download the app

- Search for "SchoolDude CrisisManager" in the phone's app store
- Select "Client Plans," then search for "Hermiston School District 8"
- Use the password "HSD" to connect information contained in the app includes a database of contact information, emergency procedures, maps of emergency exits and more general resources such as instructions on performing CPR or spotting signs of depression in a teenager. The district can use the app to send instant notifications straight to parents' phones about everything from snow days to lockdowns and evacuations.

There is also a place to anonymously report bullying, harassment and threats. District communications manager Briana Cortaberria said the district has had a tip line in the past, but the app's reporting mechanism should provide an even better layer of anonymity and hopefully provide some "solid leads" for the district to follow up on.
