

THREE MINUTES WITH ...

KALIE DAVIS

Workforce Training Program Manager

When and why did you move to the area?

My husband Tyler and I moved to Hermiston in 2009 when he was offered a teaching position at Stanfield School District. We moved to Stanfield in 2013 to be in the same community where he taught.

What is your favorite place to eat in the area?

My favorite place to eat in the area is Broken Barrel in Stanfield. They have top notch food and service!

What do you like to do in your spare time?

Hermiston has a great Parks and Recreation program. We have been involved with city league sports since we moved here and it's one of our favorite activities. I also love spending time at our family cabin by Indian Lake.

What surprises you about Stanfield?

What surprises me most about Stanfield is how many people graduate and then move back. It's a small community that people feel really connected to.

What was the last book you read?

The last book I read was Diary of a Wimpy Kid "The Getaway" with my son Phoenix. We laughed throughout the entire book and are looking forward to starting the next one!

What app or website do you use most often other than Facebook or Google?

I do workforce development, and whether I am working with students or giving a presentation to adults, I always use Prezi. I love the creativity it offers and how easy it is to use.

If you could travel anywhere, where would you go?

I am fascinated by history, so I would love to travel through Europe before World War II.

What is the funniest thing that's happened to you?

When I was growing up I got pulled over by a police officer driving a golf cart to the store for an afternoon snack.

What is one of your goals for the next 12 months?

To have no debt except our mortgage

What is your proudest accomplishment?

Personally, my proudest accomplishment is my kids Phoenix and Avalyn. They are always surprising me with their unique personalities and passions. Professionally, I would have to say developing new roles at the Port of Morrow. My time at the SAGE Center was both challenging and incredibly rewarding. Now in Workforce Development, I have the privilege of connecting people to career opportunities available within the Port.

HERMISTON HISTORY

In the last week, the idea of separating Irrigon and Boardman high school students has been discussed in the Irrigon city council meeting.

Up until 1959, Boardman and Irrigon had separate schools. Then they consolidated, and for the past three decades students from both communities became identified under one high school in Boardman.

But the desire to return schools to each community never died, and when talk of tearing down the 1921 Irrigon school building began, Irrigon residents began talking about splitting the school system to save the historic site.

"I understand the importance of community schools," said Morrow County School superintendent Chuck Starr. "There are a lot of positive advantages to each community having its own high schools."

About 53 percent of Riverside High School students live in Irrigon.

At their regular meeting Wednesday, Oct. 9, the Hermiston City Council discussed many subjects on the agenda. Here are a few that are other than routine:

As a result of protests from local citizens concerning the placement of the Hermiston section in the phone book, Pacific Northwest Bell has announced they will assemble next year's telephone directory as they have in the past, and place Hermiston at the front of the book, for directories issued in this area.

A decision was reached to go ahead with plans for the improvement of the Highway 32 within the city limits of Hermiston.

Following discussion, it was decided to have the city manager correspond with the necessary people advising that signs will be removed November 15 on Highland Avenue and Orchard Avenue at the railroad crossings.

A group of members of the Hermiston Chamber of Commerce made an excursion to Ordinance Monday noon at the invitation of D.W. Bliss, manager of Hermiston's newest neighbor town. The caravan left here at noon and ate at the Umatilla Ordinance Depot cafeteria from where

Right on the eve of peace rumors from Europe, war in the shape of the Spanish influenza broke out in the United States and spread with such rapidity that it struck around Hermiston in the 11th hour of the holding of the Dairy and Hog Show, and therefore put a quietus on an annual

the members were escorted to the town of Ordinance.

The town now boasts a population of 527 with 164 families now listed on the roster. When completely finished and fully occupied, there will be room for 350 families. The city is conveniently located just south of the main entrance into the Umatilla Ordinance Depot, making it possible for workers to walk to their work.

The business section is not completely filled as yet but boasts an up-to-date grocery store and space for several other businesses. These will be occupied as soon as arrangements and leases can be made and drawn up, according to Mr. Bliss.

event that is always heralded with pride and joy by ranchers and citizens alike.

Elaborate preparations had been made this year by the management of the fair to make the event one that would go down in the annals of Hermiston history as being far more attractive and on a more stupendous scale than that of the five preceding annual Dairy and Hog shows. But the withering hand of a widespread infectious disease had to step in at an inopportune time and put a stop to these well-laid plans that had meant so much to the dairymen, hog raisers and agricultural people of this community, who have yearly taken just pride in exhibiting the products of their farms.

But with good grace all bow to the precautionary measures enjoined by a rigid quarantine and agree that the mayor's proclamation of closing schools, the Movie, abandoning church services and stopping all public gatherings is the best method of safeguarding the public against the spread of influenza in this neighborhood.

Treadwell promoted to sales manager

HERMISTON HERALD

Angela Treadwell has been promoted to sales manager at the East Oregonian and Hermiston Herald.

"With her deep roots here in Umatilla County, background in the local business community, and an infectious positive personality, Angela is a natural choice to lead our advertising sales team in Pendleton and Hermiston," said Chris Rush, EO Media Group regional publisher. "She has a proven track record of meeting the needs of her clients and helping others achieve their goals."

Raised in Umatilla, Treadwell has called Pendleton home for almost 20 years. Having owned her own small business in the past she has a firsthand grasp of what small businesses are looking for and what they need to succeed.

"I come from a family of small business owners," said Treadwell. "So it's in my blood."

Treadwell was previously employed at Amazon.com as a customer service director and new hire trainer at the company's customer service site in Kennewick. She has also worked in sales for many years including Hamley's Western Store in Pendleton.

Treadwell is an active member of Altrusa and has been employed with the company for a year and a half.

EO Media Group is a private, family-owned company with deep roots in the Pacific Northwest. The company operates 11 print publications in Oregon and southwest Washington.
