I moved here when my brother and I were adopted in 2012. This is where our family lives.

Ixtapa. I'm a huge fan of Mexican food.

What do you like to do in your spare time?
I love to play volleyball, and I like to read.

What surprises you about Hermiston?
I think the sense of community we have. It still feels like a small town even though it's getting bigger.

What was the last book you read?
"The Sun and Her Flowers," by Rupi Kaur.

What app or website do you use most?
Probably Snapchat.

If you could travel anywhere, where would you go?
Hawaii. I've never been but it's my dream vacation.

What is the funniest thing that's happened to you?
Last year our stand went to the Walla Walla Corn Maze, and I peed my pants because it was so scary.

What is one of your goals for the next 12 months?
To make progress here. And I'm getting married, so to plan a wedding.

What is your proudest accomplishment?
Probably becoming manager here. I've been working here since high school, so it's my first and only job. I'm pretty proud of it.

The old artemisia factory on the Umatilla County Fairgrounds, a Hermiston fixture for most of its history, has fallen to the wrecker's ball.

"There's a lot of rotten in it," fairgrounds maintenance man Doug Moyer said of the wood-frame structure. "If she ever caught fire, she'd take out that whole city block."

It was the scene of a small electrical fire during last summer's fair.

The almost 65-year-old building was used as storage for the fair for the last several years. It also housed a small shop. Originally, the building was home to a small factory that made a remedy for roundworm out of artemisia, a family of aromatic herbs that includes sagebrush.

The possibility of a closed Hermiston High School campus became less of a reality Tuesday night after four of seven school board members said they would not recommend the idea based on the results of a feasibility study.

The board took no action on the matter, but decided to keep the issue open for discussion at future meetings if the public supported a closed campus policy.

ages at 43 percent each, while George Wallace muddied the water with 14 percent. For this reason alone, the cause for election of a president by popular vote instead of the electoral college system has perhaps gained strength.

Nixon will have with him as number two man in the White House Spiro T. Agnew of Maryland, a lawyer of Greek parents labeled as a dynamic liberal in political circles.

"No, we have no coal and we don't know just when we will get any," was the reply coal buyers received this week from local fuel dealers.

The situation is no laughing matter as many residents failed to take heed during the summer months when at least two carloads of coal were sent down the tracks because no storage space was available. The past week saw several nights of quite cold weather and serious thought should be given towards preparing for the months ahead.

The Umatilla Ordinance Depot has boosted its payroll deduction for the purchase of War Savings Bonds very materially. Several departments 100 percent participation so far. Many of the divisions are over the 10 percent deduction goal and the goal of the Depot is to get everyone participating in the payroll savings at least 10 percent.

We are glad to see those who can put most or all of their checks into bonds do so. Those who can and do put their salaries into bonds are to be commended. On the other hand, we remember that our boys at the front have no choice as to whether they will fight; we have the freedom to choose our work, our place of work and what we do with our money. Let us back our boys and put all we can into bonds.

There was not much interest shown in the city election on the part of voters Tuesday, the state ticket being the luring object.

Thus it was that only 31 votes were cast, but they were sufficient to put back in the mayoralty and aldermanic chairs six members of the present council, with B.F. Knapp added as the seventh member. He was elected in place of A.L. Larson, who in turn was elected treasurer to succeed F.A. Phelps. Several ladies were honored with complimentary votes, there being 10 of the 31 scattered around thusly.

How many of the readers of this paper have a brother, a son or a relative in the army? Nearly all the readers have. Do you want to see him choke to death or burn his lungs out as a result of a German gas attack? No, not if in your power to prevent. All right then, it is within your power to prevent, says M.C. Shrock, county agricultural agent.

The American army gas mask is the most effective mask made. No deaths have resulted when masks were properly applied. It is the shortage of material with which to make these gas masks that prompts this appeal to you.

Charcoal made from coconut shells was formerly used as an absorbent for the poisonous element. But the gas defense division have used up all of the available supply of coconut shells. They must resort to other hard nut shells.

Peach pits, prune pits and walnuts seem unimportant things to us at home, but to the boys in the trenches and to the war department they are vital. Gather all you can and bring or send them to the Red Cross headquarters.
