

CHAPTER II .- (Continued.) "The carriage is ready, dear," said Angela, laying a hand upon her uncle's arm. Fraser bowed with a flourish, and she could scarcely do less than respond.

"One of those Home Rule fellows?" asked the major, as he took up the reins. "Don't like 'em. Traitors, the lot of 'em.'

The groom and his master sat side by side, and Maskelyne and Angela had the interior of the carriage to themselves.

"It is a real pleasure to be here," said the young man as the carriage rolled along, with wood on one side and river on the other. He looked about him on the landscape, which seemed to doze in the warm light, but his glance returned to Angela. "I was afraid that I shouldn't be able to come, for my lawyers cabled to me twice to call me home again, but I managed to get the business throuwithout crossing. I wouldn't have missed coming for all the lawyers in New York !"

"You will find us a little dull here," said Angela. "The fishing is very fine, and you will find plenty of work for your camera, but the evenings are very long, even in this beautiful weather.'

Just at this moment the major's whip swished in the air with an angry sound, and the horses, which had been going at a steady trot, dashed for a minute into a gallop.

"Surely," cried Maskelyne, "that was Dobroski whom we passed just now." Angela raised her eyebrows a little, and held up a warning hand.

"Ah," said the major, who had pulled the horses back into their settled pace again, and now turned upon his seat with a wrathful face. "You know that fellow. do you, Maskelyne? Where did you meet him?

"I met him in the States," returned Maskelyne, "Here and there. He excited n good deal of notice there two years ago.'

"Please do not speak of him in my uncle's hearing," Angela said, in a low tone. "I will tell you why later on."

No later on than that evening she told him, and he sa wquite clearly that it could scarcely be politic to mention Dobroski to Major Butler if he desired to see that excellent gentleman keep his temper.

"Mr. Dobroski," said Angela, "escaped from St. Petersburg in a very romantic way more than thirty years ago, after the seizure of his wife and children by the government. He went to England, and my father heard his story there and found him out and was a help to him in many ways. My father was an ardent sympathizer with the Poles, and Mr. Dobroski was known as a really ardent and self-sacrificing patriot. People sometimes speak of him as a Russian, and that greatly angers him, for he has nothing but Polish blood in his veins."

"He looks Jewish," said Maskelyne, "not commonplace Jewish, but heroic Jewish. A modern Jeremiah, and full of lamentations." "He became passionately attached to no one in the world I loved so well." "Excuse me, Miss Butler," said Maskelyne, "but is Dobroski quitewouldn't say anything to annoy you for the world. But is he quite-how shall I put it?-quite master of his own fancies?" "No," she answered, frankly, "he is not,

But here comes my uncle. Let us say no more about him."

CHAPTER III.

When Fraser had seen his luggage taken from the van and bestowed in the small omnibus which met the train he walked leisurely toward the hotel, guided by the gilt sign which gleamed high above the surrounding village houses. Coming suddenly, as he had done, out of the golden glory of the evening sunlight into a shadowed chamber, he did not at first make out the things about him with any great distinctness, but he could see that a man and a woman sat at the far end of a table, and he bowed to them. "Hillo, Fraser !" said a voice. "That you? Are you holiday-making over here?"

Fraser advanced, shading his eyes with his hand.

"That you, Farley?" he returned. "How are ye? I'm a troyfle short-soyted-and I didn't make y'out at first. How are ye? Deloyted to meet Mrs. Farley once more. Are ye here for long?"

He bowed and shook hands and waved a royal condescending pardoning sort of refusal to the chair Farley pushed toward him.

"We have been here a month," said the novelist, "and we intend staying on until the crowd comes. Then we run away. Do you stay for any length of time?"

"I can't say how long I may "stop," returned Fraser, with a smile. "The man would like to know my secrets." said the smile. "I'll be having a companion in a day or two," he added. "O'Rourke's coming over." "Ah!" said the other, carelessly, "I forgot. It's getting near the Whitsuntide recess. The landlady, seeing her new guest in conversation, had withdrawn, but at this moment she re-entered, in conversation with an older visitor. She seemed to have considerable difficulty in making him understand what she had to say, for she said the same thing three or four times over.

and he looked at her with a puzzled face and an occasional shake of the head. "It is a pity, monsieur," said the landlady at last, turning upon Farley, "that there is no one here to talk the language of monsieur.' The new arrival understood the tenor of this speech, for a wagged his head at the novelist and spoke. "English not." he said. "French, so leetel-ver leetel!

Grec? Ah, yes. Deutsch? Yes." "He speaks German, madam," said Fraser, splendidly. "Allow me to translate for you." Then, addressing the newcomer, "If I can serve you I shall be pleased." The new arrival smiled, and put a ques delicate-hided Fraser, "if the Yankees wouldn't steal his copyrights." "Mr. Fraser," said Austin, "has a knack of hitting the right nail on the head. Not only that, but he always hits it at the right moment, and, as Charles Reade says, he does it with a polished hammer.

"Ye flatter me," cried Fraser, smiling and bowing. The young American threw an extra but unintentional heartiness into the shake of Farley's hand,

"I am in some sort an ambassador," said Maskelyne. "An English gentleman, Major Butler, and his niece are residents in the neighborhood, and will be greatly pleased if you allow me to take back a permission to them to call upon you, and make the acquaintance of Mrs. Farley and yourself. Miss Butler and I had an accidental meeting with Mrs. Farley this morning."

his wife since he had begun to work of the eggs, then the stiffened whites. again, and he was disposed to welcome Lastly, put in the salt and as much the advent of pleasant people who would more flour as will make a stiff dough break the monotony of her retirement. There would be time enough to make excuses for himself hereafter.

O'Rourke came the next day. Mrs. Farley leaned smilingly between the flower pots on the window ledge to bid the arrival welcome, and he, with his reddish jam or jelly, preserves or marmalade, wavy hair bathed in sunshine, and a and press the two sides of the slit brighter light in his gray-blue eyes, stood laughing and nodding back to her.

O'Rourke had the pleasantest face, the pleasantest voice, and the pleasantest manner in the world. A well-shaped head, square and sagacious, gray-blue eyes full of expression and variety, a nose with a squarish plateau on the bridge and a good deal of fine modeling about the done, take out with a skimmer. nostrils, a handsome beard and a mustache of the ruddiest gold, and a figure at once lithe and sturdy confirmed the impression of the pleasant voice, whenever a stranger, attracted by it, looked at him.

did you come here, Mr. "How O'Rourke?" asked Lucy. "Nobody came by the train but the engineman and the guara."

'I managed to get into the wrong train Now lay this dressing neatly inside at Namur. The people of the house tell the loin, after which roll and the into me that Fraser is staying here. You a round loaf. Lay pieces of bacon on have seen him, of course?" "He has gone to see Dobroski," said

Austin. O'Rourke turned in his own swift, bright way. "Ah," he said, "Dobroski is staying here." The tone was half questioning, half affirmative. "You know he is," returned Austin, laughing, O'Rourke laughed also. "Hello! There's Fraser in the road.

Who's that with him? Is that Dobroski?"

"That is Dobroski."

O'Rourke raised his hat with an air of involuntary homage, and turned his face away from Farley. By and by he spoke face still turned away.

Europe, Farley. I must go and speak to he added in his customary tone, him. and left the garden at a brisk pace. Presently Farley saw him in the street advancing toward the Cheval Blanc, in perfectly tender (and if old it will front of which stood Fraser and Dobroski, require several hours), mash and beat ST. HELEN'S HALI O'Rourke shook hands with Fraser, and into a pulp, passing through a sieve, Anarchist. It was not until Dobroski Add to this puree a half teaspoonful then stood bareheaded in talk with the old had several times motioned to him that of salt, a well-beaten egg and a tablehe replaced his hat.

O'Rourke, Mr. Dobroski," said Fraser. brown, drain on soft paper and serve O'Rourke's attitude and expression were hot with a brown sauce. almost reverential.

Bismarcks.

One pint of milk; four eggs; one small tablespoonful of butter; salt to taste; a pint of flour. Boll the milk and put it, while hot, over a pint of flour, beat until very smooth, and when Farley saw a period of loneliness for it is cool, add the well-beaten yolks that will bear up a spoon. Flour the pastry board, put the dough on this, roll out and cut with a biscult cutter. Cut a slit in the side of each of these, put into the opening a spoonful of filling, tightly together. Cook in boiling hot lard for about ten minutes. The lard should be tested first with a bit of bread, as the success of these cakes depends largely upon the frying. Have the lard hot, boiling, but not hot enough to burn. When the cakes are

Have the bone removed from a loin of yeal, and before rolling fill with the following stuffing: Chop bacon very fine and mix with an equal quantity of bread crumbs, a grating of lemon peel, a dash of mace, the same of cayenne pepper and salt and pepper. Mix together with one egg well beaten. the top, cover with hot water and stew slowly for four hours. When done allow the yeal to partly cool in the liquor, then drain it and leave till cold. Garnish with parsley and serve-

Lemon Sponge Cake.

Add the juice and rind of one lemon to one and one-half scant cups of sugar, stir in the beaten yolks of four eggs, stir to a cream, and add one and one-half cups of flour that have been sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat in a half cup of hot water, mix well, and last of all in a low and softened voice, with his fold in the stiffened whites of the eggs. Bake in a moderate oven for "That's the one indomitable heart in about twenty-five minutes.

Scrape four medium-sized carrots and cook in boiling salted water. When spoonful flour. Drop from a table-"This is me friend and colleague, Mr. spoon into boiling fat, cook a rich

Is Your Hair Sick?

That's too bad! We had noticed it was looking pretty thin and faded of late, but naturally did not like to speak of it. By the way, Ayer's Hair Vigor is a regular hair grower, a perfect hair restorer. It keeps the scalp clean and healthy.

"I am well acquainted with Ayer's Hair Vigor and I like it very much. I would espe-cially recommend it as an excellent dreasing for the hair, keeping it soft and smooth, and prevening the hair from splitting at the ends." - MINNIE FRITZ, Veedum, Mich.

In Legal Circles.

A plea of insanity met a plea of selflefense.

"Well," said the first, "I'm not so razy I don't know you have no business monkeying in a case with me."

Thereupon they clinched and an unwritten law that had been loafing tround in hopes of a job took to the woods for safety. - Philadelphia Ledger.

Lies Low.

"Of course she doesn't like discussions about ages."

"No. Usually when she's queried about hers she just says nothing, but lies low."

"Yes, or if she says anything she lies low."-Philadelphia Press.

HOWARD E. BURTON.-Assayer at 1 Chemist. Leadville, Colorado. Specimen prices: Gold, Silver, Lead, $1; Gold, Silver, Joe; Gold, 50; Zine of Copper, $1. Cyanide tests. Mailing envelopes and full price list sent on application. Control and Um-pire work solicited. Reference: Carbonate No-tional Bank.

"I came by diligence," said O'Rourke.

my father," the girl went on, "and I do really believe, without exaggeration, he would have laid down his life to serve him. When my father died he transferred his affections to me, and I know he loves me dearly."

"That," said the young American to himself, "is not a surprising circum-stance." But he kept silence.

'I could never tell you." said Angela, with an earnestness which seemed to the listener very pretty and engaging, "a tithe of the things he has done to prove his gratitude to my father and his affection for me. He has been most devoted and most self-sacrificing. But he tinges everything with a sort of fanaticism, and an idea once seized is immovable with him. My uncle intrusted some funds of mine, as my trustee, to a business enterprise of some kind which failed, and Mr. Dobroski thought for some wild reasonor no reason-that my uncle had profited by my loss, and had actually attempted to rob me. Nothing-not even the fact that before my uncle heard this accusation he had restored the lost money to my account, and had taken the whole loss upon his own shoulders-could or can persuade Mr. Dobroski that this monstrous fancy is not true. They quarreled desperately, and I have tried for two or three years to reconcile them, but with no result. My uncle will never forgive Mr. Dobroski, and Mr. Dobroski will not abandon his ridiculous fancy. It is hard for me sometimes to keep my place between the two."

"You meet Mr. Dobroski still?" asked Maskelyne.

"Oh, yes, I meet him still, and my macle makes no objections to my meeting him. But we had no idea he was living near here when my uncle decided to buy this house. I find my place between them difficult, though they both deserve to have it said that they do their best under the conditions to make it easy."

Mr. Maskelyne had taken, a year or two ago, an attitude toward Angela which made him see whatever she did and thought in the most favorable light, and yet the continuation of her friendship with Dobroski struck him as being a little curious in the circumstances. Perhaps she saw this, for she hastened on :

"I do not think that I could give you any idea of poor Mr. Dobroski's devotion. My uncle understands how hard it would be to separate myself from him. I never seek him, but when we meet I cannot treat him coldly. And, indeed, until he formed these dreadful fancies, there was tion about the postal arrangements of the town. Fraser got the required information from the landlady, and transferred it. The other was profuse in thanks, and ducked ingratiatingly at his magnificent interpreter.

"I've never been able to get to like that fellow," said Farley, as the man sat down at the dining table, after the manner of the place, to write his letter. "He came here shortly after our arrival, and we have been here together ever since. He is always very civil, and he smiles as if by clock work, but his eyes are a good deal too close together for my fancy; his forehead slopes back too much for my liking; he has a stealthy way of walking: he is my beau ideal of what a spy should be.'

"Ye do expect a spy to understand the language of the land he lives in, don't ye?" asked Fraser.

"Well, yes," Farley admitted, laughingly. "I suppose that's needful. But I shouldn't be in the least surprised to learn that he did understand. I shouldn't be in the least surprised if he understood what I am saying now.'

"Perhaps he might be," said Fraser, 'He'd not be pleased, anyway."

The man at the table went on with his While Farley and Fraser still letter. talked about him, standing at the window, he arose and walked to the end of the room, where stood a table spread with writing materials. Taking from this a little porcelain jar of sand, he sprinkled a part of its contents on the sheet of paper he had just written, and then, turning with the paper in both hands, he stood sifting the fine sand to and fro in an absent way, regarding meanwhile the two men at the window. At that moment the expression of his face was sinister, but as Farley turned in speaking his face cleared, and when their eyes met he was smiling, and he gave that little half-nod whereby some people always recognize a glance of which they are conscious from a man they know. Just then Maskelyne came in.

"This is me young friend, Mr. George Maskelyne, from New York," said Fraser. 'He's just doying to know ye, Farley."

"I have desired to know you, sir," said Maskelyne, in his solemn, gentle "for a year or two past, and to way, thank you for all the pleasure you have given me. It may please you to know, sir, that you have as large and as affectionate a circle of readers on our side as on your own." "Twould please him more," said the

"I have long hoped to have the honor of meeting Mr. Dobroski," he said. "The smallest drummer boy has a right to wish to see his general. There is not a patriot Then to two cupfuls add two tablein Ireland, sir, who does not envy Mr. Fraser and myself this honor."

"I am honored in your presence here," Dobroski answered, with dignified simplicity.

"We are not charged with any formal mission." said O'Rourke; "and you will run them into a hot oven for fifteen and spectacular piano sales, in which understand how impolitic it would be to minutes. allow ourselves to be taxed with such a mission by our opponents in the House of Commons. But we are charged with the private and personal greetings of a hundred men who are animated by your own spirit or by some reflection of it. there are onlons, fish, vegetables or ready for business. Every piano and We bring you, sir, the profound and passionate sympathy of every true Irish- damp room or cellar. Keep in a cool, thus a child could buy any instrument man, and their thanks for the part youhave played. The mere spectacle of one unconquerable and unpurchasable patriot is a help to true men the wide world over.

He spoke in a low tone, but with a manner and accent of great earnestness.

"Sir," said Dobroski, in an unsteady voice, "I thank you. Let us say no more of this."

"Hallo !" cried Fraser, who gave no sign of being at all overwhelmed by any of the sentiments of veneration which appeared to influence O'Rourke. "Here's sprinkle with castor sugar, and serve Clay & Company were surprised at the Farley's spy. Have ye seen Farley, O'Rourke? He's steeing at the same hotel with me."

"I have seen him," said O'Rourke. "What do you mean by Farley's spy?"

"Oh," returned Fraser, with his smile of allowance for human weakness, "poor Farley got it into his head that this fellow that's going down the street was spying on Mr. Dobroski. The deloytful part of the business is that the man doesn't speak a word of French or of English, either. But ye know Farley?"

(To be continued.)

Not Justified.

Mrs. Uppson-Your former nurse girl applied to me for a position to-day. Why did she leave your employ? Mrs. De Style-She whipped darling Fido unmercifully for almost nothing, Mrs. Uppson-Indeed!

Mrs. De Style-Yes; he hadn't done a thing but bite the baby.

It does not pay to envy any man's success nor rejoice in his failure.

Codfish Savory.

Flake cold-boiled cod and marinate in a French dressing for two hours, spoonfuls of rich tomato puree, two same amount of orange juice. Fill coquettes or napples, dust lightly with pepper, place on a baking sheet, and Keeping Flour.

Be careful where you keep flour. Like butter, it absorbs odors readily. It should not be kept in a place where other odorous substances, nor in a dry, airy room, where it will not be as cheaply and safely as could a state exposed to a freezing temperature, nor to one above 70 degrees. Always sift order by mail and secure the same before using.

Cream Apple Pie,

Make an apple pie in the usual manner. When cooked take from the oven. Cut out a ring of pastry from the middle and fill up with a nice thick custard. Arrange an ornament of paste over the whole, brown in a quick oven, either hot or cold. Enough for six per- rapid development of trade. sons.

Rye Puffs with Sirup.

cup of sugar and three level teaspoons

Banana Cream.

Force through a ricer one cup of banana pulp, mix with two tablespoons of powdered sugar and the juice of half a lemon. Beat thoroughly, add This is the name by which their stores one cup of whipped cream, beat again

Prunes and English Walnuts, Cut equal quantities of stewed prunes and English walnuts into thirds. Do not chop, as they will not look well. Serve in sherbet glasses with whipped cream.

The great house of Sherman, Clay & Co., pioneer Pacific coast piano dealers, purchased the entire system of stores of the Allen & Gilbert-Ramaker company, July 1, 1906. The first year has just tablespoonfuls of melted butter and the closed and it has been a year of marked success. The people of the Northwest have become wearied by the numerous, almost continual, "special," "fake," they were supposed to be able to buy a $500.00 piano for $238.00, etc.

Sherman, Clay & Company came into this territory without blare of trumpets, inaugurated no opening or special sale, but simply stated that they were organ was marked in plain figures and senator, or any one, anywhere, could price and terms as he could by visiting the store.

The results have shown that the people appreciate such a policy. The business came-sales increased in number-orders came from far and near by letter, telephone and telegraph. The business grew by leaps and bounds. We understand that even Sherman, Doubtless the great success was largely due to the fact that Sherman, Clay Sift one cup of rye meal, one cup of them, for they have been selling planos & Company's reputation had preceded flour, a saltspoon of salt, one-quarter at the conrner of Kearney and Sutter streets, San Francisco, for over thirtyof baking powder together. Mix with five years and every Californian will one cup of milk and one beaten egg youch for the integrity of the house and and bake in hot greased gem pans. the reliability of their pianos. Such Serve hot with maple sirup. pianos as the world celebrated Steinway, Knabe, Everett, Packard, and such player planos as the Angelus, A. B. Chase, and the many other reliable makes which they sell would mark any concern as "The House of Quality." are recognized everywhere. They have and serve in frappe glasses after a perfect chain of stores from Canada chilling. to Mexico.

If you want a piano, write them for catalogue and prices. They will send you full information. Their principal Northwestern stores are located at Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Spokane, Everett, and Bellingham.