give our teeth enough hard work they in it during the water. are bound to decay and the dentists have their innings, so to say. If we flabby and weak. The same principle holds good with regard to the stomach: if we do not give this organ a sufficient amount of work in digesting food, it suffers in consequence, and the whole scheme of digestion and issimilation goes wrong.

On all sides we hear inexpert dietists alking about selecting foods and cooking them in a way to be "easy of digestion"; and because this is the almost universal practice, we are becoming a race of dyspeptics. Close stu dents of the subject are well aware that it is the meat-eating nations and zeavy meat-eaters everywhere that are the chief sufferers from inflammation of the bowels (falsely called "appendicitis," either through ignorance or for commercial purposes); and this is not altogether because animal food is nasty stuff, but from the practice of chewing it or eating it in the form of hash. All meat-eating animals bolt their attempt of the Philadelphia Rapid food-not because they know more than human beings, but simply because Transcript. it is their nature to do so. It is as inphysiological and unwholesome to chew meat as not to chew the grains from cars by infuriated mobs of strike and other starchy foods. Feed a dog on hashed meat and he will have dyspepsia, and very likely inflammation of the bowels; and if his owner has a good bank account there might be an operation for "apendicitis."

When a piece of meat of reasonable size is taken into the stomach, it cannot pass into the intestines until it has been dissolved completely by the rector of Police Clay to swear in 3,000 additional police and to issue a progastric juice; but when it is first chewed or taken in the form of hash it passes into the intestines unfitted for intestinal digestion and absorption; hence, "ptomaine poisoning" and all sorts of mischief.

As for the question of baldness, we know that women are practically never bald, and this is because their hats balance on the top of their hair, with no tight band around the head; but men with their derby hats fitting tightly around the head and cutting off the free circulation of the blood from crown downward, often have the head as smooth as a biliard ball before 30 years of age. If we went bareheaded altogether we would never lose our hair, except in case of some special disease, as typhoid fever; and even then it would usually grow again .-Charles E. Page, M. D., in New York

Pole Faker of Long Ago. It is told of a titled Englishman that when his son explained his folly in going down a coal mine by saying that he spoiled his clothes so as to be able to say that he had performed the feat, replied: "Why did you say that you had been down the mine and did not go?" This method appears to have been followed by one James Knox de Bolduc, a monk, who, according to a Paris contemporary, made his Polar voyage in 1665. This is the Pole as described by this Bolduc:

"At the Pole one finds the place where all the waves of the sea con centrate to disappear in the same whirlpool. Four great islands, surround this precipice, separated by four great canals, succeeding which are the divided seas. An enormous rock, quite healthy because its component black, and 23 miles in circumference, parts are simple and wholemarks the Pole itself.

"The unfortunate ships which venture into these latitudes are immediately lost, if they are not assisted by favorable winds."

The Civil and Military Gazette of substance. In its production a Lahore, India, suggests that the account of Bolduc may be found in the 'Teutsche Acta Eruditorium" (1742), which has been described as an excellent periodical, edited by J. G. Rabener and C. G. Jucher, and contir ed from 1740 to 1751 as "Zuverlaessige Nachrichten."-Army and Navy Journal.

Misfortune of Dullness

Dullness means a lack of imagination, and without imagination life and happiness are both impossible. Re ligion and art, from one point of view share the same mission. They bring to man the sense of amazement. They teach us that the world is a wonderful fairy palace, the place of hourly miracles. Then we discover that we our selves are most amazing creatures. The dull man is not interested in himself. has no self-love. I am certain that no man can love his neighbor unless he has learned to love himself. From ourselves we discover humanity.
