SCENES IN ITALIAN DISTRICTS WHENCE CHOLERA CASES ARE SENT TO UNITED STATES.

Italian filth is responsible for the cases of cholera recently developed at New York, and which have caused the most stringent precautionary measures to be taken. The cholera cases were brought to New York from Naples or developed from contagion brought from that city. Neapolitans are notoriously filthy, and it is in the dirt of their city that cholera is bred for export. Other cities around Naples are equally filthy, and even in the north, where greater cleanliness prevails there are many dirty streets in the smaller towns, and sanitary regulations are closely observed only in the great cities. These photographs show how life goes on in dirty Naples and in the smaller suburbs of Rome.
