SAVING STORM-BROKEN TREES.

The following information is right in line with the discussions which our local horticultural society have had since the recent storm that did more or less injury to trees, and we here give Prof. Lewis' ideas on the subject:

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Corvallis, Ore.—"When trees have been severely injured by storm or by weather conditions, the first impulse of the orchardist is to rip the trees out," says Prof. C. I. Lewis of the horticultural division of the Oregon Agricultural College in response to a large number of letters of inquiry regarding the proper handling of the trees broken by the recent "silver thaw."

"This would probably be a mistake, since, with all trees except one-year-olds, there is a good root system that, if the trees are cut back properly, can be made to force out a strong, vigorous top," continued Prof. Lewis.

"Often trees injured by freezing in water or by sour sap and sunscald in spring, or by rabbits or squirrels, may be cut back in such a way as to force a new top. If the snow or ice has merely broken off the branches, the broken ends should be cut smooth with a sharp instrument, and where there are two or three left on a main branch new branches can generally be forced out and a new body be built on the tree.

"If the branches are all stripped from the tree, it may be simply cut off below the stripped place—in some trees about 18 inches above ground. I have found that occasionally two or three year olds so treated simply feather out, the buds developing clusters of leaves instead of forcing out good leading branches. One must expect to lose a few trees in this way. On the other hand, they sometimes force out strong new laterals.

"Another way is to cut back from three to six inches from the ground, when strong laterals may often be forced out which can be pruned the next year like new trees, giving the benefit of several things. If the tree forces out three or four laterals of about equal strength, these can be headed back and the tree treated like an open center, very low headed tree, and, by in-arching and intertwining all branches that can grow well together such crotches can be made much stronger than otherwise. Often it will be found better to remove all but one of these new sprouts, and prune it as if it were a new tree.

"Trees three years old or more should have another treatment. If they are rebudded or regrafted one is fairly sure of losing few trees. I would cut the tree back to about a foot from the ground and insert a couple of scions, either by cleft graft or bark graft. These would force out a fine growth which will need close watching the coming year, and should be pruned, by June or July, heading back the rank terminals to force out desirable laterals and keep the tree low headed.

"In cases of sour sap, sunscald, or injury by rabbits and squirrels where the trees are girdled, they may be cut off below the point of injury and good strong shoots will be sent out. The root system of the tree is uninjured and will probably be strong.

"Only in rare cases would I take the trees out root and all. Occasionally when the tops seem badly injured from uncongenial weather, the sprouts will be forced out, yet the top remain alive. If it seems to be vigorous I would cut off the sprout at the ground, but if there is question as to the vigor of the top and none at all to the strength of the sprouts, I would remove the old top and train the sprout into a new tree. If the sprout comes out above the graft, as is usual, grafting will be unnecessary. Rebudding or regrafting to a desired variety will be necessary if the sprouts come below.

The Pacific Coast Spirit.

[Read this, ye Mosierites, and apply it locally.]

The supplanting of the narrow, local spirit by the Pacific Coast spirit, as urged at the meeting of Portland business men with their brethren from Western Washington and British Columbia, is an end well worthy of the effort of all who desire the progress and prosperity of the Western Coast. Each city and each community has shortcomings to which it is easy, in a spirit of petty rivalry and jealousy, to direct attention, but what is the result? Each community suffers more injury in the eye of the investor, settler and tourist by "knocking" of other communities than it gains by its own "boosting." On the other hand, if each community says a good word for each of its neighbors, it will have boosters strung along the Coast from Mexico to Alaska.

The newcomer from the East regards the Pacific Coast as a whole and has but a vague idea of local distinction and differences. It is to the interest of all sections of the Coast that he should find us pulling together rather than pulling apart. He would much rather join a mutual admiration society than a "knocker's club." He will form a much better impression of a city that has only a good word to say for its neighbor than of one which betrays jealousy by "knocking." The tourists comes across the continent to see the Pacific Coast—the whole Pacific Coast—not only Oregon, or Washington, or California, or Alaska. Whether he comes by the northern or southern route, he will be apt to traverse the whole Coast and see its wonders. He will form a much better impression of us if we pass him along with a word of praise for the next place he will visit.

Then let us cultivate the Pacific Coast spirit and pull together for the common good of the favored land we have chosen for our home.—Oregonian.

Industrial Training for Children.

Before the first March winds blow the greatest series of try-outs ever held in the schools of Oregon will be under way. The boys and the girls of the state are going to determine "WHO IS WHO" in gardening, farming, carpentry, cooking, sewing, and in raising chickens, ducks and pigs. Enthusiasm for this statewide series of industrial contests is waxing warmer than it has ever been for contests along athletic lines.

The plan is for every county superintendent to enlist the support of his teachers in explaining the plan to the children and interesting them in the work, and to secure the cooperation of commercial clubs, bankers and business men in obtaining prizes for their local or county fairs. These county or local premium lists may be made out independently of the state list, but in order that children competing at a local or county fair may also be in line for state prizes the local or county list should include the articles on the state list, which are: field corn, pop corn, sweet corn, water-melons, pumpkins, squashes, potatoes, cabbage, grain selections, bird houses, piece of furniture, mechanical toy, labor saving device for home, bread, canned fruit, jelly, mending, darning, aprons, dresses, asters, sweet peas, chickens, ducks and pigs.

A bulletin of information and instruction, including the state prize list, will soon be sent out to the school children, one for every home. All the boys and the girls now need to do is to go to work. If they want to compete in gardening they should at once secure a plot of ground, which they may have plowed. If boys expect to win prizes in woodwork they should begin practicing with their tools. If girls wish to carry off laurels in cooking and sewing they must begin early either at school or at home. If it is the poultry contest that lures most, settings of eggs should be secured from breeders of pure strains of chickens or ducks. Or if hog raising seems most attractive, the competitor should secure a thoroughbred pig and start to feeding and caring for it. There is nothing to prevent a boy or girl from competing in all these lines.

Reports from all over the state indicate that Governor West's proclamation setting aside this week for the consideration of the subject of good roads in being acted upon with great enthusiasm. His message was an appeal to the citizens of Oregon to get ready for the opening of the Panama Canal and thus provide the easiest possible access to the interior country. Under the auspices of the Oregon Association for Highway Improvement, copies of the eight bills that have been prepared were sent to the commercial clubs and to the newspapers. The secretary of the Oregon Development League sent out a message that as this question was not a political issue, he urged that special meeting of the commercial bodies affiliated Calvin S. Thomason, who has been employed by the Oregon Bankers Association and the Oregon Agricultural College to carry out plans for the encouragement of agriculture among the school children of the state, started his work this week by visiting Tillamook, Lincoln, Yamhill and Benton counties. Preparations were made for his reception by the county superintendents and meetings of the commercial organizations held at the points at which he stopped gave him an opportunity to explain his mission. He announces that prizes will be offered for displays by school children in agriculture, wood-working, sewing, cooking and poultry and hog raising.

The Beautiful Snow.

The following lines suggested themselves to our friend, R. R. Morrison while "kicked up" on the Mayerdale Ranch during the recent heavy snow:

One time I was struck on the beautiful snow
That was when young, in the days long.
When with five sounding bells on a white and a bay,
Right out in style to a swell painted sleigh.
Over the hills and the prairies I'd go.
Humpety bump on the shiny white snow.
Now, things are different, there's some snow in my hair,
In the air, on the trees, in the breeze everywhere.
Snow means a coat for more flour and more meat,
More shoes and more cloths for the kid, and more heat,
What speaks to me now is a warm ruddy glow
From the sun, to get rid of all this beautiful snow.

ROADSIDE FRUIT TREES.

Attention is called in a recent consular report to the thrifty plan followed in the province of Hanover, Germany, of planting the roadsides with fruit trees, the product of which is sold at auction for the benefit of the local government, the revenue thus obtained going a long way toward the upkeep of the roads. Hanover has some 7,000 miles of county highways thus bordered. This year some of the roads yielded a revenue, from this source, at the rate of $565 a mile. The fruit if protected by a law, and during the season of ripening the roads are patrolled by sharp-eyed watchmen, on bicycles, so that little if any of the fruit is diverted from its proper destination.—Scientific American.
