TRAGIC DEATH OF ERNEST M. KING

Last Saturday afternoon two boys, Ernest King and Alex Carlson, were bathing in Mosier creek, above the falls. After coming out of the water they were walking about at the edge of the falls when young Carlson slipped on the wet rocks and fell over into the deep water beneath. The King boy, knowing his companion could not swim, jumped in after him, being a good swimmer himself. As he jumped in he called to Estel Akers, who had accompanied the two boys to the creek, to run for help. Young Akers hurried to the saw mill on the bluff above the creek and, tho very much excited, finally succeeded in making the situation known. The report was at once phoned all over town and in a short time the bank of the creek was lined with men, women and children.

The mill hands were the first to arrive at the scene of the accident. Henry Dunsmore, who was in advance, immediately jumped in with his clothes on. The water was too deep for him to reach bottom, hampered as he was by his garments, and he was forced to return to shore. In the meantime Ernest Evans had stripped off his clothing and dived into the deep hole. He brought up a body and was assisted to shore with it, where Drs. Ross and Patterson immediately began the work of resuscitation. In the excitement it was not known that there were two bodies in the water until some little time had elapsed. Then Evans went down again and brought up the second body, which proved to be that of King. Work of reviving him was begun at once and kept up constantly for a long time; but help reached the brave little fellow too late. He had given his life in an attempt to save his friend. And it does not lessen the bravery of his attempt that it aborted. It is evident that young King never reached Carlson after he jumped into the water to rescue him. This is practically proven by the fact that the bodies when found were separated some distance on the bottom, one of them lying in deeper water. Had it been otherwise, they would undoubtedly have been found together. From bruises on the dead boy's head and face it is evident that when he dived into the water he struck his head on the rocks, rendering him unconscious and unable to help his companion or himself.

After repeated efforts young Carlson was resuscitated and sent home. The body of the dead hero was brought to town and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas King, were notified. The funeral was held Monday evening from the Christian Church, the Rev. W. A. Pratt, pastor of the Methodist Church of Heppner, officiating. Interment was in Odd Fellows cemetery. The funeral was attended by almost the entire population of Mosier and the floral offerings were profuse and beautiful. The boy scouts acted as pall bearers.

Ernest Milton King was born on Lopez Island, Washington, April 1, 1899. He was one of seven children, all of whom survive him. Mr. King brought his family to this vicinity last Fall and he has been engaged as superintendent of the development work on the Sundborg place.

A son and daughter, living at Vancouver, B. C., were notified of their brother's death and they reached Mosier in time for the funeral. The bereaved family have the sincere sympathy of the entire community in their sorrow.

Greater love hath no man shown, that he giveth up his life for a friend.

Rope Horseshoes

An industry which might, it seems, be developed to advantage in this country, is that of rope horseshoes. These are largely used in Germany and some other foreign countries and should find favor here because of the large mileage of paved streets in most American cities. The rope portion is inserted in a metallic body or frame and in most instances provision is made for withdrawing a worn rope section and replacing it with a new one. In some instances the rope, which is sometimes tarred, has wire or other reinforcing material interwoven with it. Berlin is the headquarters of a syndicate composed of eight manufacturers located at different points of Germany. Possibly the practical development of the industry in this country would necessitate the modification of the shoe either in its metallic or rope portions or both, to adapt it to local conditions.—Scientific American.

Greenwood Celebration

The Greenwoodites and a few of their friends spent an ideal Fourth of July in the beautiful pine grove south of the school house, known as Pine Flat. The crowd began to gather about ten o'clock. Between 11 o'clock and dinner time a short program was rendered, the theme of which seemed to be "Everyday Heroism," with a few humorous variations. The music for the day was furnished by Mr. F. G. Powers, with his Edison graphophone.

Fifty-five picnickers sat down to a sumptuous dinner spread on the needle-carpeted ground.

After dinner some of the little boys between ten and fifty years, formed two base ball teams and played an interesting game.

Just one thing happened near the close of the day to mar its brightness and break up the crowd. Little Ruth McCutcheon, while jumping rope, tripped and fell on her arm, breaking the radial bone. She was taken at once to Mosier where Dr. Robinson set the fracture, declaring it not serious. Ruth carries her arm in a sling but gets along nicely, bearing it very bravely.
