E. A. RACE.

Some one in this neighborhood has a healthy appetite for chicken. Quite a number of the people have suffered from the depredations of the hen roost artists and many Sunday dinners have been minus a chicken. In two instances the nocturnal visitors to the poultry parlors left clews to their identity, but they were never followed up and of course the owners of the "clews" were naturally too modest to come forward and claim their property. At one place a bunch of keys was left in a padlock on a chicken house door and at another place a silver watch was accidentally left behind. Stealing chickens is a "fowl" crime and if these midnight marauders should chance some dark night to stop a load of birdshot, beans or salt, he might be somewhat pained, but need not be unduly surprised.
