TRAILING OREGON FRUIT

Portland, Ore., Aug. 27.

The United States Government is trailing Oregon fruit. There is no cause for alarm. No effort will be made to seize the shipment for it is considered the best in the world and that's not the kind of stuff that officials want to discourage.

Today a carload of pears started from Medford enroute to Washington, D. C. It is accompanied by an official representative of the government and its shipment will be the first of a series of tests that official Washington is going to conduct to see just how the fruit is treated in transit and exactly what condition it arrives in.

Attached to various boxes of pears in this carload, are wires that lead to a recording thermometer on top of the car, which will show exactly and at all times the exact temperature of the pears inside of the box. Heretofore experiments have been made only with the condition of the atmosphere outside of the box. The latter resulted in some good to investigating officials of the Department of Agriculture, but the new arrangement will likely result in the revelation of shipping methods. With an exact record of the temperature inside the boxes, officials will soon be able to discover the exact degree of air that should be in the car.

The government is making this investigation with the aid of the Northwestern Fruit Exchange of this city, who sold the car, and its affiliated organization, the Rogue River Fruit & Produce Association. The carload of pears was selected for its exceedingly good quality; therefore the result of the investigation will be awaited with much interest by the fruit trade of the country generally.

Pear shipping is now general from the Rogue River valley, therefore the government officials in charge of the investigation consider this the opportune moment to start their work.

THE 1913 APPLE CROP

Portland, Ore., Aug. 27.

Estimates of the apple crop of Oregon are being generally reduced—in some instances quite materially, on account of unusually heavy dropping, blight and dry rot. At the present time it is not generally believed that the total production will be within 80% of first estimates.

The dropping of apples all thru the state was unusually heavy this spring, several conditions being assigned as the cause. The wet, cold weather is attributed as one of the chief contributing causes. More rain fell during the late spring and early summer than for many years. Orchards in some of the leading districts which have in ordinary seasons been compelled to thin their fruit at heavy expense during recent years, this year not only did not have to employ help to do this, but the elements cut out a much larger per cent of the fruit than human interests have ever attempted.

The fire blight has proven a very serious affair in practically all sections of Eastern Oregon. In some sections of that portion of the state the trees at this time look as if there had been a fire all thru the orchards.

One of the big problems of apple growers of Oregon this season, and which will have a serious effect on the total yield is the dry rot, or the fruit pit. This is especially serious in the Willamette Valley and in the Hood River section. Reports from the latter section indicate that the trouble is much more aggravated than a year ago. It is difficult at this time to estimate absolutely the extent of the damage on this account, but all doubts that it is serious, have passed.

Early in the season it was indicated that the Hood River section would produce probably 800,000 boxes of apples this year, but it is not believed at this time that the crop will reach 700,000 boxes, if that amount is reached.

Another factor that will affect the total crop of apples is the second infection of apple scab that is taking place. This appeared as little red spots on the apples and was thought to be a new fungus growth, but its further development has proven beyond a doubt what it really is. In some districts this is going to seriously cut into the total yield of the better grades of fruit.

One of the redeeming features of the apple crop of the state this season is the fact that the apples now promise to be of better size than other recent seasons. This will minimize the loss occasioned by blight and dry rot.

Years will be affected by blight and this will cut down the expected yield of the state somewhat.

A Playful Prelate.

Dr. Magee, who was for a brief period archbishop of York, was once induced by a friend with whom he was staying to go and hear a certain preacher. Asked afterward what he thought of the sermon, Dr. Magee answered that he thought it was rather long. "Yes," agreed his host, who was a great admirer of the preacher, "but there was a salt in the pulpit." "And a martyr in the pew," was the doctor's prompt return. The same prelate in giving advice to a newly appointed suffragan said, "They will send for you to open churches, cemeteries, schools, vestries and clockrooms, and to unvel windows and clocks, and it may be that eventually they will want you to open an umbrella!"—London Mail.
