Also a Great Master.
The persons in the gallery who were most impressed with the J. Pierpont Morgan collection of pictures were two small girls, one eight and the other ten years of age. Uncertainly they spelled out the names of the paintings, which conveyed very little, and they were truly moved, of course, by the dashing Duchess of Devonshire and the small princess by Velazquez, and the wonderfully engaging young lady by the unknown Spanish painter. Lastly they came to the portrait of Mr. Morgan himself, and from this they appeared directly to the attendant on guard.
"Please, sir," they asked, "did Mr. Morgan paint all these pictures?"
The guard was a true gentleman. "Not all," he answered.—New York Post.
