A MODEL'S SORROW.

It Would Obtrude Itself in Spite of All Precautions.

A magazine illustrator possessed the services of a model which were highly valued on account of the man's ability to wear evening clothes "like a society man," a feat which many professional models cannot achieve.

"This model had 'seen better days,'" but the only remaining relic of them was his dress suit and his ability to wear it properly. Sometimes he would turn up half an hour before the time appointed for his sitting, wearing a shabby business suit. After some minutes' conversation on any topic that popped into his head he would finally approach the matter that distressed him something like this:

"You will pardon me, sir—I regret to say—I am overwhelmed with confusion, but—but, sir, if you will excuse me, I was obliged, absolutely obliged to—er—hypothesize—in short, to pawn my evening clothes for $3. If you will kindly redeem them I am quite at your service, sir. Here is the ticket."

Now, this sort of thing continued for a long time, until finally the illustrator hit upon the plan of hiding the model's business suit while he was out of the room, sending him home in his evening garb, confident that he had no other and that he would return the day after ready to pose.

The hour arrived, but instead of the model there came a messenger boy with this note:

"Dear Sir—I cannot find words—I do not know how to convey to you—I am lacking in—but, alas, sir, that fatal 'but.' I was driven, forced, compelled, again to pledge my evening garments as collateral security for the sum of $3. Redeem them, and I am at your service. I am at the pawnbroker's, in bed in a back room. I enclose the ticket"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Poverty's Graduates.

No man living is more worthy to be trusted than those who toil up from poverty; none less inclined to take or touch anything which they have not honestly earned.—Lucian.

He Knew What He Was Asking.

"Is there any mail for John or me?" inquired the general delivery patron.

"You're strangers to me," retorted the postal clerk. "Do you suppose I can tell people's names by looking at them?"

"I don't see that it makes any difference if I am a stranger. Look and see if there is any mail for John or me—John O. Moe."

He got his letter from a much subdued postal clerk.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Picking Him Out.

"The poet Tennyson," said an English writer, "was often rude. Tennyson was so widely loved it turned his head a little. At any rate, he was often guilty of rudeness. Once he made a rude and scornful remark about the dress of a certain dandy. Now, dandies generally take care of themselves, and this one was no exception to the rule. The dandy happening to be in the presence of a crowd of people when the remark was repeated to him by a mutual friend, screwed his glass into his eye and drawled calmly: 'Oh, really? Which Tennyson was it—the dirty one?' Everybody smiled, for of the Tennyson brothers Alfred was undoubtedly the more careless."

An Awkward Mistake.

When Lord Dalhousie was commander in chief of the British Indian forces he visited the king of Oude at Luck now and made a point of presenting Lady Dalhousie. The king of Oude, glittering with diamonds, sat in his gold chair and narrowly watched Lady Dalhousie advance across the marble floor of the great hall. He did not understand Lord Dalhousie's presentation. He thought Lord Dalhousie wanted to sell the withered woman to him, and, shaking his head, twisting his black mustache and smiling scornfully, he said as the countess courtesied low before his throne:

"Take her away. Take her away. She won't do at all."

Honi Soit Qui Mal y Pense.

It was recess. Two small boys were having a somewhat rough struggle, and when one received an unexpected hard blow he exclaimed: "If you don't look out you'll end up in a place that begins with H and ends with L!"

A passing teacher, hearing the remark, scolded the boy severely for what he had said.

"Well," replied the boy, after a pause, "I'm sure I don't know what you're talking about. I only meant 'hospital.'—Chicago Herald.

ASSOCIATION PEAR POOLS GRATIFYING

(From the Hood River Glacier)

With the exception of a negligible quantity of Winter Nellis, the Apple Growers Association has closed its pools on the year's pear crop. Shipping a total of 48 cars of all varieties, the Association handled about 75 per cent of the pears of the valley.

The best returns shown by the local agency are for d'Anjous, the market for which was bullish throughout the season. For 11 cars of combination extra fancy and fancy pack, the Association received $2.20 per box. Eight cars of C grade d'Anjous were shipped, the pool price being $1.50 per box. Because of the strict grading, extra fancy pears were very scarce, and the Association packed its fruit in a combination of the two highest grades.

Other varieties are reported as selling at the following prices: 17 cars of Bartlett's, combination pack, at $1.91 per box, and C grade at $1.75 per box; two cars of Bosc, combination, $1.86, C grade, $1.38; Beurre d'Easter, a negligible quantity, average, $1.25 per box. The remainder of the season's yield was made up of a large number of varieties, including Fair Blatter, Flemish Beauty, Winter Nellis, Wakefield and Kiefer. The pools on the Winter Nellis shipments, which will be closed soon, will show net returns of approximately $1.50 and $1.25 for the different grades.

The pear crop of the valley has been a surprise, not only in yield, but in net returns to growers. The average net returns shown for all varieties by the Association being $1.35 per box. The satisfactory yield of the season's pear crop and the handsome profits derived by growers who have plantings of any size, has stimulated such interest in the fruit that new tracts will probably be set to the commercial varieties during the next year.

Profitable Change.

A well known conjurer one day visited a Scotch village. After performing many astonishing tricks he asked for a halfpenny, which a collier lent him. The conjurer then said he would turn it into a sovereign. He did so, as the people thought, and handed it around for them to see. When it reached the collier he coolly pocketed it and said to the astonished conjurer: "Will ye change me another?"—London Mail.

The Calculus.

The "bottom meaning of the word 'calculus' is pebble—calculare, calculus, pebble. Thus we are taken back to the very early time when calculating was carried on by the help of the pebbles that preceded the regular numerals.—New York American.

Women.

"Women are dreamers!" murmured the sentimentalist, gazing on a group of them in silk attire.

"You can bet they are," the practical snipped back at the murmuring one, "and dreams go by contraries, all right!"—Judge.

Our Role in Life.

No man can be both a dreamer and a man of action, and we are called upon to determine what role we shall play in life when we are too young to know what we do.—Richard Middleton.

Ceylon's Coconut Trees.

The island of Ceylon has about 60,000,000 trees, yielding 1,200,000,000 coconuts, many of which are used local for food and drink.

Difficulties are things which show what men are.—Epictetus.

FORMER GOLDENDALE MAYOR CONVICTED

The case of Nathaniel L. Ward, ex-mayor of Goldendale and well known as an attorney, who was convicted by a jury on an embezzlement charge in the superior court last January, came up again last week, and Ward was sentenced by Judge Back of Vancouver, who acted as the trial judge, to serve from six months to 15 years at hard labor in the state penitentiary at Walla Walla, according to a dispatch from Goldendale. Judge Back overruled a motion for a new trial in the case some time ago.

Ward was arrested upon complaint of Mrs. Sarah C. Hughes, a former resident of the White Salmon country, who came from Sallisaw, Okla., to swear out a warrant.

P. P. I. E. Notes

(From Oregon Commission Bulletin)

The Oregon building now boasts the most remarkable apple exhibit on the exposition grounds—a three box display of Newtown Pippins from the crops of as many years. Beside a box of the 1915 crop stands another of the 1914 crop, and beside that is a third box of the 1913 crop. Except for the fact that the 1914 apples are yellow, as a matter of course, there is little or no difference between these and this year's apples. The box of fruit picked in 1913 is very deep yellow and is not far from decay, but these apples take a splendid polish and are not discreditably beside the others. This display occupying a special position and properly placarded is made by H. O. Frueh, of the southern Oregon booth, and attracts a great deal of attention. The keeping quality of Oregon apples has been impressed upon visitors thoroughly during this fair, placards telling just how long fruit has been on display. While California experts change the fruit in their exhibits every three or four weeks, Oregon's representatives find it unnecessary to make a change under 10 weeks and in many instances boxes of apples are kept on display four months.

Fifty boxes of Spitzburg apples from Ashland, 50 from Medford, 50 from the Willamette valley, 50 from Hood River and 50 from eastern Oregon placed on display in the Oregon building, were on November 15 given to the thousands attracted by Oregon apple day.

The real display of Oregon apples at this time is that in the Palace of Horticulture, this being comprised of the 100 boxes sent for competitive purposes. These apples come wholly from Hood River and Rogue River valleys and are the finest these famed sections can produce. More than 30 varieties are represented, and the display, just now being finished for judgment by the jury of awards is beautiful beyond compare. Oregon has a larger number of competitive entries than in any other state and there is confidence that the jury will find that Oregon has the finest fruit being shown at the exposition. The display is set in the center of the Oregon pavilion at the Palace of Horticulture, cannot be passed by the thousands and will not be passed by any who catch even a glimpse, for it is one of those displays that hold the attention and bring out those satisfying "ohs."
