PORTLAND BLAMED FOR EXCHANGE LOSS

(C. C. Chapman in Oregon Voter)

We can put a finger on the shortcoming—the failure of our business men to appreciate what the Northwestern Fruit Exchange, a private corporation, meant to our community and state.

After they had pioneered along these lines for two or three seasons, and secured superb results for the apple growers who entrusted them with the marketing of their products, our state and community started in to foster competition.

The exchange was charging growers a low price per box for handling their apples, and losing money for its stockholders during the pioneer period, but nothing would satisfy the fruit growers but that through cooperating they could do it cheaper than could the exchange.

The result? The exchange moved its head offices to Seattle, where the atmosphere to a business enterprise was friendly. Seattle was only too delighted to grab off a business which would tend to make it the fruit marketing center, instead of Portland, the logical location.

But that narrow, community spirit was small compared to the loss to the apple districts of Oregon. This state lost the one greatest, virile, enterprising, sound organization whose whole effort was devoted to marketing apples.

Fruit growers of Oregon have looked to Portland for sound leadership. We have given too little attention to their problems; have given them well intended but hasty and unsound guidance; have lost business for our city and have let the great apple industry fall behind in marketing its products.

H. R. LIQUOR COST FOR YEAR OVER $5,000

The estimated total cost of liquor imported by Hood River county covers for the year 1916 reaches $5,250. Up to Tuesday, the local office of the American Express Co. has delivered 402 shipments of intoxicating liquor. Ninety parcels of liquor remain in the office undelivered.

The total liquor shipments for the year have reached 2,996, practically all of them containing two quarts. Over 150 shipments of beer have been received.

LITIGATION MAY FOLLOW EMBARGO

(From the Hood River Glacier)

Litigation between Northwestern fruit sales agencies and transcontinental railway lines is likely to result from the action of the railway systems in placing a temporary embargo on the shipment of apples, according to officials of co-operative boxes agencies.

Officials of the Apple Growers Association characterizes the action of the railways in setting the embargo as involving a principle that may be very inimical to Northwestern fruit interests.

The Union Pacific embargo went into effect Saturday night at 12 o'clock. The Great Northern was refusing early last week to accept shipments of apples to the Pacific coast, which can handle local shipments of apples through its Wallula gateway, offered to carry fruit in ventilated cars but refused the option of the shipper to send the fruit by heater service.

The Union Pacific embargo, which was said to have been because of the abnormal congestion of the freight, the lack of motive power, and the prevailing cold weather over the Rocky Mountain region, will last until January 8, according to announcements. The Apple Growers Association is hit more heavily here than any other shipping concern.

OBITUARY

James McGregor

James McGregor died on Sunday, December 24, 1916, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Daniel Grant, in Portland, at the age of 91. For the past two months his condition has been critical, and for 36 days preceding his death he had practically fasted, as it was impossible for him to retain food or drink.

Mr. McGregor was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, November 6, 1825. In 1861 he became interested in the coal industry of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. After a number of years he went to British Columbia, and then to California. He settled in Mosier 22 years ago, a pioneer homesteader, and resided here and in Portland the remainder of his life.

His intellect was exceptionally clear and recollection distinctively vivid to the last. His hearing, which had never been impaired, was very acute and at all times he took keen interest in the games of cards or checkers, or playing always a masterful game. A student of social and economic questions, Mr. McGregor enjoyed the daily papers and even during the year often walked many blocks in Portland to various meetings. One of his greatest attributes was self-poise which he had developed to a remarkable degree.

His wife, Mrs. Isabella McGregor, died in 1899 in Mosier. Four of his eight children survive. They are J. K. McGregor, of Mosier; Mrs. Isabella Waite, of Madras; Miriam McDonald and Mrs. Daniel Grant, of Portland. Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon from the Skewes Undertaking parlors in Portland. The body was accompanied to Mosier by the members of the family that night. Short commitment services were held at the cemetery, Rev. Leon L. Myers officiating. The remains were viewed by relatives and friends, and then laid to rest by the side of his wife in the family plot.

WHAT S. BENSON HAS DONE FOR PORTLAND

(Written for the Portland Spectator by John B. Yeon)

For the man living in the great outdoors, nature more often opens her book of beautiful scenes than for the city dweller. She introduces the woodsman to her secrets by teaching him how to listen to the whispering trees, the chattering chipmunks and the laughing ruffles.

He worked to see perpetuated the beauty of nature; each water fall he wanted made accessible so that all the people could visit and enjoy them. Mr. Benson loved the natural beauties of this great Oregon country with an unselfish love.

Take for instance the Wahkeena Falls. Less than three years ago Mr. Benson purchased these crystal cascades for $20,000. Today they could not be bought for ten times that sum. Another attraction that he has given the public is Multnomah Falls. I think that some hotel owners would give for this site today! Also, consider the thousands of people who are enabled to enjoy the views from the top of Larch mountain because an easy trail has been built to the summit.

Other gifts have been made to Portland and Oregon by this generous man. They are the many bronze drinking fountains in the downtown districts and the trades school building. These donations are valuable not only to the present generation, but to the future citizens of the state as well.

It would be well for me to explain some of the road work that has been possible because of Mr. Benson's interest in seeing the projects carried through. About three years ago he gave the state $10,000 to cut out a road way on the side of Shell Rock mountain, which was considered by many a barrier around which no permanent road could be built.

APPLE NOTES

The Bureau of Entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture, according to its annual report just issued, during the past year has devoted considerable attention to insects attacking apples, grapes, peaches and nuts.

The studies of the codling moth in Colorado in cooperation with the Colorado experiment station, according to the entomologists, have yielded much valuable information. The studies have shown that there are in the Grand Valley two broods of larvae and a partial third brood each year.

Other investigations show that what is called "stigmose injury" to apples is connected with the punctures of the fruit by aphids particularly the rosy apple. Spraying resulted in a considerable diminution of this injury.

Experiments in the use of poisonous gases against the woolly apple aphid indicate that carbon bisulphid may be applied to the roots with good results by injection or in water poured around the roots. Experiments in the control of the woolly aphid on the roots of nursery apple stock by the use of poisonous gases indicate that while the use of carbon bisulphid is impracticable under nursery conditions para-dichlorobenzene offers promise against this pest.
