Under the direction of the county court work of improving the piece of road from the county industrial farm west to the Snipes farm was commenced Monday, says The Dalles Chronicle. This short stretch of county road has been in a deplorable condition. The surface will be plowed and covered with crushed rock and rolled.

The Mosier Valley Bank and the local postoffice observed the holiday yesterday commemorating the birthday of George Washington. The bank was closed all day. L. J. Merrill, cashier, going to Hood River to secure dental work. The post office observed holiday hours. The local business houses were open the entire day.

E. M. Strauss and baby daughter, Irma, went to Hood River Monday and the little girl was taken to the Cottage Hospital. Mrs. Strauss went down Tuesday morning to remain with her little baby. Mr. Strauss returning Tuesday. At last reports, yesterday evening, the little one was considerably improved.

In the item published two weeks ago concerning the donation work done by local citizens in removing the dirt embankment from the front of the building of the Church of Christ, a mistake was made regarding the number of hours of work donated by C. L. Joy. Instead of 4 hours work by himself and team, Mr. Joy put in 14 hours with his team, a typographical error.

Martin L. Clement, after an absence of six weeks, returned to Mosier Tuesday. He visited in Los Gatos, Santa Cruz, Watsonville and other points with relatives and friends. Mr. Clement stated that while he was in the Santa Clara Valley the orange blossoms were frost-bitten, the temperature dropping to 23 degrees above zero which is cold weather for the coast. The weather for the most part, however, he said has been warm and sunshine has prevailed.

E. Jacobsen returned Thursday afternoon to Portland after enjoying a strenuous work out on his ranch six miles south of the city. The road leading from the Jacobsen ranch has been shortened a quarter of a mile and now makes a much better grade, eliminating also a sharp and dangerous curve. Mr. Jacobsen, with F. G. Engelke, who is employed in charge of the ranch, have been busy this week getting the road in shape, and will later build a corduroy road at one steep pitch.

The Misses Clara and Jennie Carroll left yesterday for Salem to attend the convention of the State Christian Endeavor Societies which will be held in that city Friday, Saturday and Sunday of this week. The two young ladies have been sent as delegates from the local organization. Miss Jennie Carroll expects to return home Monday, but Miss Clara Carroll will visit for a few days with friends in Portland. Rev. Leon L. Myers, of the Church of Christ, also left yesterday, but will return in time for services at the church Sunday morning.

Since Sunday night at occasional intervals there has been a light snowfall which now covers the ground at a depth of a little over an inch in the city. In parts of the higher rural districts fresh snow to the depth of a foot has been reported. The weather has been moderately warm, however, with the wind generally in the west and the snow has melted nearly as fast as it has fallen. On Wednesday night, the ground was slightly frozen and yesterday snow fell nearly all day in light flakes melting some the next day. Farmers and orchardists welcome this snow for the moisture which it will produce in the soil.

Praise for Wilbur

The Salem Capital Journal, in an issue of last week, has a resume of the work of all the senators. Speaking of George R. Wilbur, joint senator from Wasco and Hood River counties, the Journal says: "Wilbur, one of the best voiced senators, talked only when he had something to say and if brevity is as claimed, the soul of wit, he is a genuine humorist. His words were always listened to and generally heeded."

HISTORICAL ADDRESS AT H. R. WOMAN'S CLUB

At the celebration of Admission Day by the Hood River Woman's Club, J. D. Lee delivered an interesting address.

Mr. Lee's address was of historical value. Portions of it dealing with early Oregon history follow:

The trail of the early immigrant passed not far from where we are standing. It has become historic. It is to be improved and adorned as a great national highway. It will be traversed by thousands. There is a way in which all can and should travel the path of the pioneer. It is the path of rectitude, of integrity, of heroism, of self sacrifice, that they followed. They were patriotic, self reliant, true virgins, and they were the backbone and well being of the community and of the republic.

I used the word aborigines. Did I use it correctly? Were they the first inhabitants of the country? Anthropologists say no. A people more enlightened but less warlike had given way, presumably, before the spear and bow and superior value of the Siwash. He held the country by conquest, an uncertain tenure liable to be challenged by some other tribe or nation. He had ignored the great command to go forth and conquer the earth and subdue it. He had thereby forfeited no doubt, the right of eminent domain, but his ejection was not ordinarily very strong. He was not promptly provided a proper home. His own malignant cruelty often made it hard for his conquerors to be so generous, though their inclination to be so was not ordinarily very strong. These observations form a basis for historical discussion in almost any direction.

Today is an anniversary. A few reminders relating to it will not, I trust, be amiss. Just when serious thoughts of occupation of the country began I will not stop to discuss. My first allusion is the advent of Jason Lee, the great missionary and colonizer, and his associates in 1841. They were succeeded by Rev. Samuel W. Hays, Dr. Marcus Whitman in 1836. Father, Blanchett and Dauers, a little later. As these were religious movements I have grouped them. Capt. Wyeth and others came during the interval. After the arrival of the Lausanne early in 1840 incidents pointed to permanent settlement. The influx of Canadian-French began about that time. Hunters, trappers and agents of the Hudson Bay Co. had long traveled the country gathering furs and pelts, but had made no settlements. Dr. John McLaughlin, who afterward endeavored himself to so many by his great heart and generosity, located in Vancouver in 1824.

In 1841 agitation for the formation of a simple government began. It grew into discussion. Meetings were held. I will not go into detail.

On May 2, 1842, at Champoeg, on the bank of the Willamette river, the first meeting was held. The voters attending by a vote of 52 to 50 expressed their preference for the United States and proceeded to organize a little republic. The name given was the name of the "provincial government." A most simple judiciary was provided. An executive committee of three was named, who should direct the government and execute the laws, Hall, Gale and Babcock.

Reason was seen for a single executive head and Geo. Abernathy was chosen governor and continued so until superseded by Jos. Lane, territorial governor in 1849, March 3.

Up to June 15, 1849, the country had been jointly held by Great Britain and the U. S. under the treaties of joint occupation of 1818 and 1827. At that date, June 15, '46, the treaty between the two nations was signed by James Buchanan secretary of State, and Richard Packham, plenipotentiary for Great Britain, making the 49th degree of north latitude the boundary.

The first considerable immigration was in 1843. Followed in 1844, a most much larger in 1845. Notwithstanding the treaty the U. S. did not take formal action to extend its jurisdiction over the territory until August 16, 1848. I was then resident of Oregon, being nearly three weeks old. (That is why I remember so well these early events.)

Gen. Jos. Lane was appointed territorial governor by President Polk, but did not reach Oregon, the seat of government, until March 2, 1849. On the 3rd, next day, he issued his proclamation and territorial organization began the day before the expiration of President Polk's term. Oregon's population was then 9088. President Zachary Taylor was inaugurated. He or his vice presidential successor, Millard Fillmore, tendered the Oregon governorship to Abraham Lincoln, but he declined it. Following Gen. Lane were governors John P. Gaines, J. W. Davis and Geo. L. Curry. In 1851 California was admitted as a state and agitation for Oregon's admission began. At every session of the legislature, which then met annually, sometimes at Oregon City, sometimes at Salem and once in Corvallis, something was attempted to forward statehood. Opposition to immediate action developed in Southern Oregon, as there was a movement to create a new territory from a part of northern California and southern Oregon.

The legislature of 1856-7 provided for a constitutional convention and election of delegates thereto. They were duly elected and held the convention in the fall of 1857. It was composed of a splendid galaxy of really able and practical men, and they formed a constitution wisely adapted to the times. Only one of the members is living, Wm. H. Packwood of Baker. In a recent interview he stated that his family name was Duncan, but that as a friendless boy on a river steamer he was the carrier of the word and received the name of "Packwood" which he had retained. The constitution was adopted and state officers elected.

At the following legislature Jos. Lane and Delazon Smith were elected United States senators. At special session on July 8, 1858 John Whitaker was inaugurated governor.

On the 12th of February, 1859, the final vote in congress was taken and on the 14th President James Buchanan signed the bill and Oregon became a state. We then stopped writing O. T. or the full Oregon territory. That is what we did theoretically, for it must have been some weeks before the news reached us. I remember well when my folks were first apprised of it. Father and I were working in the barn. Isaac Levens, a neighbor living close to the village of Dallas, came past. After the usual salutation he remarked "I suppose we are now living in the State of Oregon." Our population was about 50,000.
