Shortly after four o'clock a. m. yesterday (Thursday) the cry of fire rang out clear and startling and almost in a less space of time than it takes to tell it, our slumbering city was rudely awakened, and our citizens on rushing forth witnessed one of the principal corners in Medford in a mass of flames, which lighted up the city for blocks in every direction.

Notes of the Fire. Several cans of coal oil, which stood in one corner of G. L. Webb's store, came out whole—that is the oil came out of the hot flames whole, but the cans were melted and scorched.
