SUGGESTS APPLES AS MEDICINE

Correspondent Tells of Great Advantages of Apple as a Curative.

To the Editor:

In view of the early approach of the holding of the International Apple Exposition at Spokane, Wash., I deem it an opportune time to bring to the notice of apple growers a matter which is not only dear to my heart, but which should interest every lover of the apple, no matter where he or she may hail from. During my observation on the subject for 25 years I have arrived at the conclusion that all fruit in general, but the apple in particular, is practically an antidote against the liquor and tobacco habits. While I do not claim this as a new discovery, I know that it is not generally known as it should be, the importance of which can hardly be overestimated if my contention be true.

As to the absolute truth of my assertion, I will say that a hard drinker very seldom eats fruit of any kind. This applies with almost equal force to the user of tobacco. On the other hand, show me a man who has formed the fruit habit, that is, a regular daily consumer of fruit, and I will show you a man who drinks very little, if any, alcoholic liquors or uses tobacco to excess. The two simply will not mix. There is some property about fruit juices that takes away all desire for stimulants or narcotics. Some philosopher has said, "man is but a bundle of habits," wherein there is much truth.

Then, why not adopt means to establish the right habits in the young, to the end that when the "bundle" is made up, the "straight sticks" or good habits, may crowd out the crooked sticks, or bad habits. As applied to the solution of the liquor question, there is no doubt but what "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Hence, I would suggest that in each public school room a "press the button machine" be placed at the exits, filled with a uniform grade of good, sound apples, so that when the children leave the rooms at morning and afternoon recess they be allowed to press the button and receive an apple. Those who have misbehaved to forego the play, also the apple. In support of my perhaps novel idea, allow me to say that without doubt my scheme would improve the morals of the school, call it a bribe for good behavior if you please, all the same it would induce many a mischievous little shaver to behave him or her self. Children naturally crave fruit. Many times, when a child, have I been accosted by a little playmate with a request to "give me a bite," or "give me the core," which proves to me that they not only had a craving for fruit, but that it was not satisfied at home. A great many children do not get fruit of any kind at home, especially where the head of the family is a drinking man. He doesn't care for it himself, and naturally considers it a superfluous luxury. The prosperity and future greatness of the nation depends largely on the health and hardiness of the people, and even were I wrong as to the claims I make for fruit as a preventive of the drink and tobacco habit, the improved health of the children would well be worth the money. I will venture further and say that in my opinion the preservation of the children's teeth, on account of eating even but two apples a day, would alone pay for the cost.

It's the best investment the American people could make. It is something of more far-reaching consequences than would appear on the surface to the casual observer. Better the health and you improve the morals, which, in turn, lessens crime. I would very much like to see the experiment tried, certainly the apple growers ought to feel interested in anything that would add fame and fortune to the one product of which Oregon is so justly proud.

HENRY DITMERS.

HUGE DAM RAISING TO CHECK THE LOST RIVER

KLAMATH FALLS, Or., Nov. 3.—An engineer just arrived from Clear Lake, Cal., which is to be the storage reservoir of the eastern limb of the Klamath reclamation project, reports that the dam across the Lost River valley when it leaves the lake is nearing completion. This structure, which is to impound the waters of Clear Lake, is the initial work of the upper project and is a substantial wall of earth and rock 35 feet high and about 2500 feet long. It has a core of stone supported by embankments of earth and has on the reservoir-side a stone face to prevent damage through the action of the waves. The headgates are of concrete and finished throughout according to modern methods. This massive structure will be fully completed by November 15. There are at this date over 200 men employed there, a force fully adequate to complete the dam by the date mentioned.
