SCIENCE WHISPERS ASTOUNDING SECRET

After Exhaustive Research Professor
Announces That to Reduce the Food Bill is to Eat Less.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The way to reduce the food bill is to eat less.

After profound labor, exhaustive research into economic statistics, a searching investigation of production and demand, mixed with tremendous mental exertion, this is the solemn conclusion which science—and Professor Milton Whitney, chief of the bureau of solids of the department of agriculture—has achieved. In the expert mind of the professor, science whispered this momentous fact, not straightway, the professor has admitted the wondrous statement to a breathless public through the medium of a government press agent.

Professor Whitney (with the aid of science) thus deduces the astounding news, radical and marvelous axiom that if one wants his meals to cost less, he must eat less.

The professor is modest in making this weighty statement. With science, he also gives partial credit to Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson, and congratulates James J. Hill—who used to be distinguished for his facility in acquiring railroads, but is now mainly known for his ideas on the conservation of everything, including food—for also being struck with the same idea.

"Mr. Hill," says Professor Whitney, "is right in saying that our soils are not keeping up with the demands of our people for foodstuffs. But this is not due to a falling off in productivity." Science, he goes on to state, indicates that productivity has kept pace with the per capita growth. Then why the increase in cost? Obviously, says the professor, because of an increased demand per capita—an increasing national appetite, a desire for more food.

Mr. Hill said something of this sort himself some time ago, but since Professor Whitney doesn't refer to it—being engaged with science principally—probably Mr. Hill didn't state it to him personally.

In the house "minus something" that's a part of the proper home equipment? The ads are important.

A Snap

Twenty acres, level, deep soil, close in, at $625 AN ACRE.

Planted as follows: Sixteen acres in Newtown apples, 7 years old, balance in Bartlett pears, 3 years old.

At Hood River you would be asked $1500 an acre for a similar tract.

Look into this offer as closely as you like—this young orchard is a bargain at the price.
