There's a New Procession of Want Ad Readers Today!

There are a good many separate and distinct ads printed in this paper today. And it would be vastly interesting if one could know just how many people read each one. It's safe to assume that some people read every ad in the paper. It's safe to assume that a greater number read but one or two ads each. The law of averages works pretty surely in the cases of store ads, however. The people who buy at stores read the ads of stores—as a matter of common-sense policy. Every day the store sales are governed and gauged by the ad-readers. With the classified ads the case is different. The man woman who want work today are feverishly interested in the Help Wanted Ads. Finding work, tomorrow's help wanted ads have no interest for them. But tomorrow's ads, appeal with the same urgency to an entirely different set of people. So it is with every classification—there's a procession of readers and answers every day—the little ads reflecting the intimate business and social affairs of the people of the city. One cent a word. Six insertions to the price of five.
