NIGHT ONE OF SUFFERING.

in death gulch. Several-five Greeks, Hungarians and Poles were started down the trail last night. Someone started the rumor that they were robbing the bodies of the dead, and the rumor grew like the slides. It had no foundation, but Superintendent O'Neil told the men to leave. Nerves Are Taut.

The sight of so many dead has drawn the nerves taut. It would take little to make men kill in Wellington. Among the workers, Superintendent O'Neil stands out for mental and physical endurance. He has been up and going since Tuesday morning, bearing the burden of direction of all the ghastly business. Last night when he dropped to rest to the floor he had added years; his rather boyish face was scarred with lines that will never be eradicated. Dead at Wellington.

The dead and injured are still held at Wellington. The perils of the trail down to Seenic were considered too hazardous before; it is doubly dangerous now that the snow is falling. Survivors today told with awe of the church and Sunday school services held Sunday morning by Rev. J. M. Thompson of Bellingham. Mr. Thompson's body is somewhere in the snow, as is most of his congregation. A few of those who knelt in supplication to their God Sunday morning are alive to tell of it and return their thanks, but for the most part these worshippers are vanished.

Steam Motors Again.

The Wellington slide carried away all the Great Northern electric engines used to carry trains through the tunnel. It will take six months to replace these and it will be necessary to resort to steam service. Rotary plows are coming from the east as fast as steam can drive them to aid in clearing the track. Railroad officials refuse to guess at the date when the line will be opened.

As the morning wore on, the heavy snow that had been falling steadily all night again turned to rain. The danger of new slides grows more acute every hour.

If common sense rules, you will not experiment, but buy the car that five years' experience in the Rogue River valley has proven the best adapted for this section, and that car is the

There may be others "just as good," but they cost $1000 more.

A car unequalled in power, speed, performance, reliability and durability.

This is saying a good deal, but truth will prevail.

Ask any owner of a BUICK what he thinks of the car, and you will find that it has stood the test of time.
