ASHLAND WOULD HAVE BEST PAVING

Progressive City Sends Officials to Study Hard Surface Streets in Portland and Determine What is Best for Them.

PORTLAND, April 16.—Mayor R. N. Snell and Councilmen W. F. Loomis, William Myer and J. C. Barnard of Ashland, Or., are in Portland inspecting the different kinds of paving material used in the city. Plans of the Ashland solons contemplate the paving of about four miles of streets of that city this year, and the officials are anxious to select the best on the market.

"Ashland is growing rapidly," said Mayor Snell. "We are making it a home town and a tourist town and a health resort. Many wealthy people are going to Ashland to live, and a number are building fine homes. Property is rising in value and many divisions are being subdivided. Our water supply comes direct from the melted snow, as does Portland's and I do not believe there is a better climate in the world. Most encouraging to us is the fact that many residents of Southern California are going to Ashland to live, preferring the climate.

"The school census shows that the population of Ashland has increased to 8800 and we believe the federal census will show it is about 7000. New residents are arriving and farm land never sold more rapidly."

Mayor Snell was recently victorious in a recall election. In the recall election he had a larger plurality than when originally elected.
