So they went on together, master and dog, and were passing around the far side of the coaching party when suddenly Caesar began to nose the ground excitedly. Then, running to his master, he stood with eager eyes, as if urging some pursuit.

"The detective observed the dog in surprise. Was this some foolish whim to follow a squirrel or a rabbit? It wasn't like Caesar.

"Come, come," he reasoned with friendly chiding, "don't be a baby."

Caesar growled in vigorous protest and, darting away, began circling the ground before him, back and forth, in widening curves, as Coquell had taught him.

"Paul was puzzled. Evidently there was a scent here, but what scent? He had made no experiments with Caesar since the night of the crime, when the dog had taken the scent of the pistol and found the alleyway footprints. But that was ten days ago. The dog could not still be on that same scent. Impossible. Then, deciding quickly, he gave the word, "Cherche!"

On through the woods went Caesar, nose down, tail rigid, following the scent, moving carefully among the trees and once or twice losing the trail, but quickly finding it again, and presently, as he reached more open ground, running ahead swiftly, straight toward the coaching party. Coquell realized the danger and called loudly to the dog, but his voice was drowned by the cries of ladies on the break, who, seeing the bounding animal, screamed their fright. The dog was flying full at the break, eyes fixed, body tense, and now, with a splendid effort, he was actually hurling himself through the air when among the confused figures on the coach a man leaped forward suddenly. There was a sharp report, and then Coquell saw Caesar fall back to the ground.

"My dog, my dog!" he cried, coming up to the stricken creature.

One glance showed there was nothing to be done. The bullet had crashed into the broad breast in front of the left shoulder, and it was all over with Caesar.

"You coward!" flung out the heartless man. "You have killed my dog!"

"Then some one on the break said, 'We had better move along, hadn't we, know!'"

"Yes," agreed another. "What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

"What a beauty he was!"

Bonneton warningly under the table. Groener answered with perfect simplicity: "No wonder you smile, M. Mathieu. But think how far away from Paris I live! Besides, I want this to be a happy day. Come, little cousin; you shall tell me all about it when we are out together. Run along now and put on your nice dress and hat."

Alice rose from the table, deathly white. It seemed to Coquell that her eyes met his in desperate appeal, and then, with a glance at Groener, half of submission, half of defiance, she left the room.

Mathieu bowed politely and, followed by the sacristan, went out.

"Now, Bonneton," ordered the detective sharply when they were in the lower hallway, "I want you to go right across to Notre Dame, and when you get to the door take your hat off and stand there for a minute or so fanning yourself. Then Tignol, who's watching in one of these doorways, will come across and join you. Tell him to be ready to move any minute now. He'd better loaf around the corner of the church until he gets a signal from me. I'll wait here. Now, go on."

"I'm going, M. Paul; I'm going," obeyed Bonneton. And he hurried away.

Coquell saw Alice hurrying toward him, tense with some eager purpose.

"Oh, M. Mathieu!" exclaimed the girl in apparent surprise. "I know who you are. You are M. Coquell," now whispering.

Just a Story

I am from "Old New England," and not ashamed of the fact, but I am now a citizen of Oregon and am proud to say the Rogue River Valley is my home. And, to make it still better and give a more definite location, it is in the progressive city of Medford that I have "pitched my tent."

My native state is not the place to grow balloons, therefore I make use of no "hot air" in my talk.

After two years' stay amid these protecting hills, I have concluded that the best thing to deal in was land, a thing that is limited in quantity and as it is always sought after is always rising in value.

I do not wish to get all the real estate business in Medford, but do desire my share.

Therefore, I respectfully invite you to call at my office and see if I have not got just what you are looking for at a price that won't strangle you.

Truly yours, as usual,
