What We Are Coming To.
 It is one of the wonderful women of Paris that presides over the world's most modern household. It is an electrical household in the heart of the French capital, and fitted with all the equipments and mysteries of a fairy tale. You live there like Aladdin with his lamp, push a button, and geni, extra wonderful even for geni, because they are silent and invisible, do all the rest, writes Ada May Kreeker.

In the dining room is a switch-board with electrical measuring instruments and the necessary keys. The duties proper to each key are inscribed above it so as to lessen the chance of error. Many varied and handsome combinations of lights can be arranged to suit the particular party in process and the colors chosen for the decorations.

In the center of the table is a large ornamental piece and dishes filled with fruits from all the world over. Roses are strewn about, and in the roses are hidden the smallest of electrical bulbs. The mysterious central part of the table is encircled by an oval groove. This groove leads to the two silver-plated doors which cover the entrance to the electric elevator. The rest of the table, devoted to the plates, knives, forks and other dainty dining utensils, is bounded by low parapets of glass and silver.

Below the table nothing appears except two nickel-plated bars, which guide the elevator. This is placed in the basement, directly under the dining room. One of the bars ingeniously contains the mechanism operating the elevator and the crescent-shaped silver doors above it.

On the table beside the host are four electrical push buttons. When all the guests are seated the host presses the white button. This makes a little drum beat in the kitchen. Immediately the silver elevator doors fly open, the soup tureen rises to the table and the doors close and conceal the opening. The red button is pressed at the right or left and the dish travels around the table in the corresponding direction.

The kitchen is another marvel. It is a miracle of cleanliness and neatness. The electrical range looks like a buffet in casings of wood and marble. Attached are an electrical clock, an electrical switchboard, a rheostat, by which the strength of the current and the heating effect are varied, and an ammeter, which measures the current used in preparing each meal.

The range has four separate electrical heaters of polished aluminum. They can be operated separately or together. With the electrical clock every dish can be cooked to the precisely proper degree. A fowl in the electrical oven takes exactly 30 minutes to roast by radiation. So the electric contact of the clock is set at the figure 30, and when this number of minutes has elapsed the current is automatically cut off and an electric bell rings to announce to the chef that the bird is cooked to a turn.

Even the milk is drawn automatically into the pan. There is a rotating table holding machines for chopping meat, churning cream, washing dishes and sundry other apparatus, all driven by a small dynamo. Eggs are boiled without water, and, contrary to the every expectation of a cook accustomed to use wood, coal or gas for a range, a fowl begins to roast in the center and the skin does not brown until the cooking is finished. This way of cooking does not dry out the meat, but lends it an especially delightful flavor.

Near the kitchen is the laundry with its own wonders of electric washing machines, electric drying stoves, electric irons, electric ironing machines and other devices. "Electric spies" are distributed all over the house in all the rooms and halls, behind the wall paper and the hangings, and connected with sensitive microphones, so that master or mistress of the house can simply press a button without leaving the bed and know everything that is being done and said in the house.

There is a Wonderful Difference between the light afforded by an ordinary carbon incandescent and the brilliancy of our new General Electric MAZDA lamp. The latter radiates two and one-half times as much light with the same amount of electric current.

A 40-Watt MAZDA Affords Twice the Light of the 50-watt carbon lamp now in general use and costs one-fifth less to burn. We recommend its use to our customers as it more than cuts their light bills in two, making electric light so inexpensive that no home, however humble, and no store, however small, can afford to be without it.

Ask us to show you the new General Electric MAZDA lamps and clusters.
