THE ILLINOIS EXAMPLE.

· LLINOIS is at present furnishing a shining example of the benefits of machine rule in politics. Members of the legislature have confessed that they accepted bribes to vote for United States Senator Lorimer and the nauseating details of corruption are being made public.

A few years ago Delaware was without representation in the upper house because of similar corruption through the ambition of wealthy men to wear a toga. Shortly before that Montana furnished another shining example of the beauties of the present system. Even before that Oregon had a dead lock session, and corruption was the order of the day.

Dozens of cases could be cited of legislative scandals over the election of senators in a score of states. It is the logical outcome of prevailing methods in politics. Beyond the scandals are the open secrets of politics, the domination of legislatures by corporations and tools of the 'beast in the jungle."

It is to restore this condition—which Oregon broke away from when it adopted the direct primary law and made possible the selection of senators by a popular vote -that the Oregonian and the politicians are today centering their energies upon the creation of an assembly, merely another name for the political machine through which they hope to restore old conditions, bribery, scandal and corruption.

Voters of a state have a right to say who they will vote for. Where old methods obtain, they have nothing to say and are left to a choice between men selected for them by those who make politics a business. Illinois people had no will in the election of their senator.

Prejudice, ignorance and partisanship have ever been the willing servants of the few who seek to control legislation that will divert the earning of the many into the pockets of the few, and so in Oregon we again hear the same old appeal under the pretense of saving the party.

Purification of politics may remain an "irridiscent" dream, but certainly politics in Oregon have been purer under the direct primary than they were under the old system and it is hardly probable that the people will want to restore conditions prevailing now in Illinois.
