LABOR DAY.

"Men of labor, heirs of glory,
Heroes of unwritten story,
Nurslings of one mighty mother,
Hopes of her and one another,
Rise like lions from your slumber,
In unvanquishable number,
Shake to earth the chains that bind you,
That in sleep have fallen on you;
Ye are many, they are few."

Labor day has been set aside by legislators as a tribute to those who toil, and incidentally vote. It marks the growth of the esteem in which labor is held in the modern world that contrasts sharply with the disesteem of all ancient civilizations.

Labor, through the long centuries in which the toiler has advanced from slavery and serfdom, has gradually acquired a dignity of its own — a truer dignity than is born with tinsel of caste. The development of democracy has been the development of the toiler, until today, when the average skilled laborer is as well and often better informed than the tradesman and even those in the professional classes.

All olden civilizations were built upon the cornerstone of slavery. All labor, manual and mental, was performed by slaves and it was considered a disgrace for those of the patrician caste to speak to or associate with the toilers, who had no rights. Historians were ashamed to even write of the laborer, and their narratives are merely stories of the ruling caste. Soldiers were ashamed to fight the despised commoners, and the patrician youths of ancient Greece amused themselves by hunting and slaying their own workmen, busy harvesting in the fields.

In those days, when "the glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome" were enlightening the world, the toiler was thought to not even have a soul. The census of Athens revealed 9000 "souls," when its population was 300,000. The many were the property of the few, to work, to torture, to slay as they wished. The cross provided a favorite torture post, while the working man's frantic death agonies as he perished from crucifixion or died in a wreath of flames, for no other crime than being a toiler, furnished amusement to his noble masters for centuries. Once 6000 workmen were crucified and burned to death at once time along the Appian way.

The uplifting of labor, the gradual emancipation of mankind, has progressed slowly, but steadily, through the centuries—moving faster and faster as the development of humanity progressed.

It is a far step from those days, when all the arts and sciences, as well as manual labor, were in the hands of persecuted slaves, to the present day, when an entire nation sets aside a day in honor of the toiler, and countless thousands of them are marching through a thousand cities, giving expression to the force and strength and place in the nation of those who work. And yet labor has not fully come into its own, nor will it until the arrival of the long dreamed of millenium—the universal brotherhood of man.

POINDEXTER HAS FIGHT.

This was done to beat Poindexter, who is a progressive, according to insurgent leaders here today. They point out that Poindexter managers were not invited to the "love feasts." The meetings of the two fighting wings of the republican organization were arranged through Ballinger's efforts and finally Wilson was prevailed up to withdraw. Burke once was general counsel for the Great Northern railroad.

From today until September 13, when the primaries are held, a whirlwind campaign is expected.

burrell orchard

Forty-two (42) carloads of Pears have been shipped from the BURRELL Orchard and there are others to follow from day to day. This does not include the Winter Nelis, which will not be ready to pick for several weeks. Only the Bartletts, Clairgeau, Howell and d'Anjous have been picked.

The BURRELL ORCHARD consists of 605 acres. It is being subdivided and sold off. One block contains ten acres in full bearing Bartlett and Winter Nelis pears and Jonathan and Yellow Newtown Pippin apples. There is nothing better as a home place or money earner.

Another block contains a little over 13 acres of Bosc, Bartlett and Howell pears five years old. Trees and ground are of the very best and will commence to turn off carloads of fruit next year. Some of the Howells this year yielded over a box per tree.

Another block contains 13 1/4 acres of six-year Spitzenburg trees, nearly all of which have apples on this year. They have been pruned for wood up until this year and ought to pay for themselves in the next few years.

These last two blocks lay side by side and would make one of the show places of the valley if owned and properly cared for by one party. They would prove to be a regular mine for someone.

The best is the cheapest always. Look into this proposition. Only two miles from Medford and in a community that is desirable from every standpoint.
