

Liner of the Cavalry

By Gen. Chas. King

And thus were we brought to the morning of Thursday, the sixth since the eventful night when Miriam Arnold's shriek had alarmed the garrison...

With Thursday noon came resumption of telegraphic communication and the long stalled railway trains from east and west.

What now? thought the sleepy major as he scuttled downstairs in slippers and dressing gown.

It is Mayhew, sir, said a solemn voice. I've come not hoping, only praying, I may find my daughter here.

Good God! said Stannard. Come in. And he led forthwith his aged and trembling comrade within doors, seated him by the still glowing stove in the front room and struck a light.

But—God! He had never looked for this. Oh, where had she gone? And why? He had found her at home and in ten years after the fire.

Had she fled to join anybody? was the question that racked so many a heart, for, with the possible exception of gentle Mrs. Stannard, the girl had made no confidant.

It was this, full fifteen minutes after Lieutenant Field and two of his men had trotted off to town, that started old Stannard and big Jim Ennis down the valley from the veterinarian's, through "Sudstown," where girls and women were huddling and whispering at the news.

"I'll have him out," said the corporal of the guard and ran round to the south end and presently came back triumphant. He had roused the two orderlies. The burly major strode in, his Jim Ennis at his heels.

and ordered to explain. Even as Stannard was hastening the movements of the men detailed to mount and trail the Foster team, even as Ennis was galloping toward on a mission of his own, Captain Langley of the infantry, officer of the day, began his stern examination of the luckless guardian.
