BIG CROWDS SEE OLD SCOUT

The usual large circus crowd thronged the Medford streets from surrounding towns between the performances of Buffalo Bill's Wild West show. Colonel Cody, who has been the big feature in his big show since its first exhibition in 1883, swears that this is his last tour or the west. One more year in the circus ring, shooting at flying glass, bulbs before the cheering, surging multitude and the old scout will repair to his farms in Wyoming. When asked in his office this morning at the show grounds if he was tired of the show business he said: "No. I never get tired of excitement, but I want to have a chance to enjoy my farms at Cody, Wyoming, in the Great Horn valley. I have some beautiful farms in Wyoming which I have never seen during the green season, as I have always been away with my show."

The Wild West show formed by the old veteran scout, Colonel Cody, will not cease with the retirement of General Cody into private life, but no longer will the colonel be billed as the main feature of the program.
