KAISER DRIVES CHORUS AWAY

BERLIN, Sept. 27.—"I don't want to see any more flamingo legs!"

This extraordinary outburst of the kaiser's indignation at the ballet has given rise to considerable excitement among the fair ballet dancers of the capital.

The firm belief of the kaiser in the Divine rights of kings and his serious conviction of the infallibility of monarchs have led to a series of fundamental revolutions in politics, art and science since his accession to the throne. The stage, a domain in which the imperial views regarding the pedagogical influence of the theater can well be demonstrated, has not escaped unscathed. The simple, stirring plays of bygone ages have been supplanted by gorgeous Byzantine displays in which the whole wealth, pomp and splendor of former imperial ages dazzle and bewilder the spectators as well as jades their senses.

The ballet, too, held in such great esteem by William the First, has been transformed and remodelled to suit the kaiser's taste. In olden days the ballet was considered one of the most important parts of court theater performances, and nothing delighted aged Wilhelm the First more than to feast his eyes on the graceful and supple movements of his short-skirted favorites, Mesdames Barberina and Pepita. The Empress Augusta, it is well known, objected to the ballet as prejudicial to the morals of the German public. Nevertheless, the sturdy old kaiser was not to be daunted, and the art that whiled away the weary hours of Cardinal Richelieu and Maria de Medici remained the point de resistance at the Berlin Royal opera house.

All this has been changed. "I don't want to see any more flamingo legs," was the kaiser's recent remark to the court manager of royal plays, and forthwith the nimble, pink-colored tights of the members of the corps de ballet were enveloped in long, clinging garments. Free, unfettered movements have given way to slow, expressionless actions, and a reign of inexpressible dullness has set in; for the merry little dancers who used to be the life of the royal theaters.

The kaiser was influenced in this decision by the present empress, who doubted the advisability of displaying such female charms in the presence of her grown-up sons, who inherit with their Hohenzollern blood all its vigorous tendencies. The death sentence of the old ballet was spoken, and since then the noble terpsichorean art, with its gauze and glitter, its abandon and grace, has ceased to exist in Berlin.

500 WEST POINT BOYS IN TROUBLE WITH PROF.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Sept. 26.—Five hundred cadets at West Point Military academy, who have been held in confinement since Saturday on charges of insubordination and disrespect to a superior officer were released today and until the charges have been investigated by a board of inquiry.

The men were placed in barracks for "silencing" Captain Longan, instructor of mathematics. The cadets will not be permitted to leave the academy.

Modern Hair Dressing

has played havoc with the tresses of the fair sex, and druggists everywhere comment on the fact that they are selling large quantities of sage for making the old-fashioned "sage tea," such as was used by our grandmothers for promoting the growth of their hair and restoring its natural color. The demand for this well-known herb for this purpose has been so great that one manufacturer has taken advantage of the fact, and has placed on the market an ideal "sage tea," containing sulphur, a valuable remedy for dandruff and scalp rashes and irritations. This preparation, which is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, is sold by all leading druggists for 50 cents and $1 a bottle, or will be sent direct by the Wyeth Chemical company, 74 Cortland street, New York City, upon receipt of price.
