(By Professor O'Gara.) The early estimates of the country's fruit output for the coming year were largely incorrect, in that the amount of frost injury was very over-entimated While fronts have been rather severe and frequent in some districts. It must not be forgotten that modern methods of frost prevention have done much during the past spring to lessen the amount of injury which would otherwise have occurred. While this is not true to any great extent in eastern districts, the middle west, the intermountain districts and the Pacific northwest have all saved an immense amount of fruit by scientific frost fighting. However, the peach crop in most districts suffered severely and this was mainly due to lack of protection at the proper time. There are certain sections, however, where the frosts were heavy and yet 25 per cent of a crop has been saved. This 25 per cent does not mean that orchard heating saved only that proportion of the crop, but that one-I fourth of the orchardists fired and saved practically their full crop. This is particularly true in certain Colorado districts. In the Palisade section in Colorado and throughout the Grand valley generally, it was the firing alone that saved the day. Peach Crop Light. The peach crop generally is light. Georgia will hardly ship a thousand cars, when the normal crop should be 7000. Georgia's shortage will have a marked effect upon prices, especially for Elberta peaches. Throughout the eastern states the peach crop is also light, but this is due to the fact that heavy rains during the blooming time prevented pollination.

Except in a few localities, the middle west and Pacific northwest peach crop will not be more than 25 to 35 per cent. This is indeed true of Colorado, Idaho and Washington districts. Michigan, however, will have a large output of peaches and it is quite probable that New York will also come in quite heavy. California is very spotted and some sections show up well, while others have a very short crop, due to the heavy frosts. The upper Sacramento river country and the large peach growing sections in the Sierra Nevada foothills east of Sacramento also admit a shortage. Coming to the Rogue River valley, we find a very good crop of peaches, which should, with the shortage in the northwest, sell for good prices. Practically no damage was done to the peach erop in this valley. Only a few spots show
