JUST AN OVERSIGHT.

ATTENTION is called to the editorial in the Portland Telegram written by Editor John F. Carroll, reprinted elsewhere, as containing food for reflection.

This is a necessary condition in every young fruit district. Time, labor and capital are necessary to grow the orchard, and that is one of the reasons why bearing orchards are valued so highly.

California and every other favored fruit region has gone through the same experience. It may be a temporarily undesirable condition, but it cannot be called unnatural or unhealthy.

Mr. Carroll's remarks, however, can apply to the entire state. The balance of trade is against Oregon—the state does not produce as much as it consumes.

We have, however, proved that in this district we can produce what all the world wants to buy—and we are striving to produce it. During the few years necessary to establish any industry, the balance of trade will be against us.

Mr. Carroll leaves the impression that the withdrawal of 80,000 acres from farming for orchards has resulted in changing the balance of trade. This acreage is but a small percentage of the available acreage.

In the good old do-nothing days that Mr. Carroll talks about Jackson county had about a quarter of its present population. We did not have the home market that we have now.

In the building, we have been so busy that we have lost sight of the small essentials. We have planned for the future at the expense of the present.

A Few Reflections About Medford

(Portland Telegram.)

There is no place in Oregon which so impresses one as being a miniature city as does Medford. It has the air and style and it has the sort of people to back it.

The surface of things presents a true picture and yet it is not entirely true. The prices of land have gone up steadily and what it has produced has largely justified it.

About 80,000 acres are now set out to orchards in the Medford section. In 10 years from now they will probably be producing 20,000 carloads of fruit, say about one carload to every four acres.

It is now very largely a waiting game for the enormous acreage of fruit to come into bearing. Besides this, Medford sends outside the money needed to supply its people with food. At a glance it will be seen that the condition is not economically healthy.

During the '99 gold excitement in California some of the men who knew trades turned from the feverish excitement of gold hunting to steady employment at their trades.
