STREET LIGHTS AND CIVIC PRIDE

When we became interested in getting a broad view of the decorative lighting proposition, we asked a number of mayors their opinions. We anticipated rather cautious replies, for, as a rule, such officials are reticent in commending improvement that have not absolutely proven their use and value.

Mayor Edward E. Burkhardt, of Dayton, Ohio, in writing of the experiences of that city, says: "We installed three hundred and sixty-nine ornamental standards and the result has been a practical transformation of our business section. They help business by attracting people to the business section."

"My own opinion is that in spite of the beautiful bridges, boulevards and other improvements that we have made here in recent years, the ornamental street lighting is the best, most beautiful and most profitable improvement that the city has made in twenty years."

Mayor Edward Schoeneck, of Syracuse, speaks even more enthusiastically:

"The transformation resulting from the installation and use of our 5-light ornamental electric posts is so pronounced," he says, "and the contrast with other streets not thus equipped is so great that there is bound to be an extension of this class of lighting service in the business centre of Syracuse. The attractiveness of a street thus lighted is reflective of the enterprise of the merchants whose business places line it and a standing advertisement of their progressiveness. The strikingly illuminated thoroughfare attracts the crowds, and the crowds bring business. Civic spirit is also reflected in the effort for pleasing yet refined effect. This system of lighting business streets is indicative of 'something doing.'"

Mayor F. R. Crumpton, of Superior, Wisconsin, has no hesitation in commending the plan:

"I do not know of anything that has been done in our city the past few years that has added more to the beauty and general benefit of the city than our ornamental street lighting. It has helped the appearance of our streets greatly and has a great benefit to the business interests where they are located and also increased the value of real-estate many times more than the cost of the installation. We are working on plans to extend the system to other streets as fast as possible and hope that in the near future the lights will be on many more of our streets."

Mayor Samuel L. Shank, of Indianapolis, Ind., is equally positive:

"Ornamental street lighting has proved to be access in this city. Not only is the new system ornamental but the results obtained from a lighting point of view are most satisfactory. This new idea of illumination gives our city a distinctive appearance and causes much favorable comment from visitors."

John McVicar, Superintendent of Streets and Public Improvement, of Des Moines, Iowa, says:

"Des Moines is thoroughly pleased with the ornamental street lighting. Its effect upon the streets where it is installed has been to exhilarate business to such an extent that business houses on other streets have at the expense of the merchants and property owners, and the lighting area extended. Beyond question, the addition to our lighting system in the business section of the city has been of great benefit to the merchants, property owners and to the city in general."
