VACUUM CLEANER REMEDY FOR FLEAS

Federal Veterinary Makes Discovery That Application of Suction Draft Kills Fleas That Infest Animals of All Kinds.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—Vacuum dog covered with fleas? Does the family cat sit around all day making futile and ineffectual stabs with its hind legs at in accessible places on its anatomy in an effort to catch elusive foes? Do the other four-legged animals that belong to the family zoo also give evidence of being inhabited by the biting parasites? Then use a vacuum cleaner?

All the dog soap and cat soap on the market is worthless when compared to the common garden variety of vacuum cleaner, according to a statement of C. Barnwell Robinson dean of the United States College of Veterinary surgery of this city. The doctor has been experimenting for years in a vain effort to rid "pediculus," the surgery's pet cat, of the numerous fleas which bothered her.

The other day, when a vacuum cleaner was being used to withdraw the surplus dirt from the floor of the animal hospital, one of the attendants playfully ran the nozzle over the cat's back. At first the feline resented the attack, but, upon second thought, she stayed and the operation was renewed. It was found that a large number of fleas that had found a resting place in "pediculus'" fur had been killed by the application of the cleaner. From that time on, Dr. Robinson veraciously asserts that the cat voluntarily backs up to the cleaner to receive her daily dry bath.

Dr. Robinson has found that the vacuum apparatus is a great success as a flea exterminator and he intends to spread the news broadcast so that all other animal owners—as well as the animals themselves—may profit by the accidental discovery.

The president thinks the Cuban treasury could not stand the drain at this time.
