

STRIKE PART OF HUGE REVOLT

Winston Churchill Declares That Labor Disturbances Are Part of Political Scheme to Force Recognition of Laboring Classes.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—While London was practically isolated from the rest of the world by the great strike of all its transport workers which today is not entirely settled, Viscount Churchill, presiding at a meeting of the stockholders of the Great Western railway, declared it his opinion that the tie-up was more than anything else, a part of a huge "political scheme."

More Strikes Promised.

With what the viscount said, few of the more enlightened of English workmen are disposed to disagree. Great Britain has had an enormous number of serious strikes of late. The transport workers strike, which very nearly resulted in starving London to death, was the biggest of them thus far, except for the few days that the railway employees tied up practically the entire train service. That there will be bigger ones in the near future is the general belief in labor circles. In short, as labor leaders frankly admit, Viscount Churchill would hardly have been going too far had he described the transport workers' strike as part of a "huge revolutionary movement" rather than as part merely of a "political scheme."

Workingmen in Revolt.

The fact is that English workingmen are about tired at last of the way in which they have been ground down into the earth for the benefit of the privileged classes. The workingman who, in the United States, would receive $25 or $30 weekly, gets in England for the same work $7.50 to $10 and the average employer's view has always been that he ought to get less.

While the strikes were supposedly for recognition of the unions and higher pay, the viscount declares they were for the purpose of showing the workers what the privileged classes are able to do to them when they so desired.

WHEN YOU WANT A QUICK SHAMPOO

(From New York World.)

"The woman who delights in keeping herself well-groomed encounters trouble with her hair in summer. The dust is everywhere and yet it is inadvisable to resort to soap and water frequently enough to keep the head clean. Too much wetting makes the hair brittle, coarse and lifeless.

"In view of these facts the wise woman depends upon dry shampooing to keep her scalp clean and her hair in healthy condition, so as to promote its growth. You can make an excellent dry shampoo by simply mixing four ounces of therox with four ounces of orris root.

"Keep the mixture in a sifter-cap can and whenever you want a quick shampoo, or before dressing your hair for the evening, sprinkle a tablespoonful of this mixture upon the head; then brush the powder all out of the hair.

"Five or ten minutes' brushing will leave the hair light, bright and fluffy, for therox takes out all dirt and dust. This treatment keeps the hair fine in texture and rich in color, and helps it to repel dampness in the evening air."
