Only One Error. Only one error marked the strusgle. The ball except for that was field, in the grandstands and in the bleachers went mad with enthusiasm at the closeness of the play. Bender, though he struck out more men than Mathewson, was scarcely as effective. The peerless Matty, peerless still, was master at all times. Philadelphia's only score came on what was conceded to be a snap-play.

Fred Merkle, who lost the penuant to the Cubs by failing to touch second base, redeemed himself, playing the first bag in faultless style. Both teams played practically flawless ball. The Athletics seemed nervous and neither Collins nor Baker, their sluggers, was able to make any headway against Mathewson, who at all times held the American leaguers
