JUSTICE TO WOMEN IN CALIFORNIA.

AS A RESULT of the recent special election, women of California have been given the right to vote. The women of Washington, Idaho and California now have suffrage. Oregon alone among the Pacific states has refused to woman the right to cast a ballot. As Oregon is quite progressive in politics, it is not at all improbable that next fall will witness the triumph of equal suffrage here also.

As a matter of justice, women are as much entitled to vote as men. There is no qualification that can be applied to restrict suffrage that would not bar as many of one sex as the other. Whether or not women care to exercise the right if conferred upon them is no argument against what should be a birthright, and a duty.

Women are as well qualified as men to pass upon men and measures. Some are intelligent and some are fools. The average in mentality as well as in morality is probably as high in one sex as the other. The fewer the restrictions, the more the tendency toward discussion, education, and progress.

The history of equal suffrage shows that no great reform has been possible in corporation ridden states like Colorado, where it is in operation, without the support of the women, and that this is the one element that venality cannot corrupt. As woman's influence is usually for good in all circles she frequents, so has it been for good in politics.

In the progress of humanity, woman has been regarded in turn as a chattel, as a slave, as a plaything, and finally as a companion and partner. Females have the same parentage as males and inherit the same abilities. Is a man in any way superior in mentality to his mother, his sister or his wife, simply because of the accident of sex? Why pretend to regard one half of the people as inferior to the other half?

In the evolution of the world towards Utopia, women are destined to play as large a part as men. It is impossible not to regard them as equals and futile to attempt to enforce unnatural restrictions. Everyone must be given equal opportunity for development, including women, to fulfill dreams of a better world.

Humanity loves its chains—hence we like to keep up the fiction that males are superior beings to females. But it is written that we must cast off the links that bind us to inequality and injustice if we are to have real progress, and though prejudice and reactionaries may delay the day, eventually woman will, the world around, be recognized as entitled to equal voice with men in the government of nations.

Enfranchisement of women is a victory for popular government, for democracy. It indicates that women are recognizing their duties to the state as well as their brothers' duties, and that no real democracy can exist where one-half the population arbitrarily governs the other half.

Objected to the Publicity. Man's instinctive and perfectly reasonable preference for reprimand delivered in private is illustrated by a story told by Lieutenant General Sir William Butler, G. C. B., in his "Autobiography."

A general commanding at Aldershot and been forcibly reprimanded by a royal commander in chief. He openly rebelled.

"I don't mind being called a fool," he said, "if it pleases your royal highness to call me so, but I do mind being called a fool before your royal highness' other fools," sweeping his hand toward the commander in chief's large and brilliant staff.

Sympathetic. "By ginger!" roared Blithers wrathfully when his son informed him that he had flunked at college. "I'm blest if I know what to say. I—"

"I sympathize with you, dad," said Blithers, Jr., feelingly. "That's just the way it was with me when they asked me those blasted questions at examination!"—Harper's Weekly.

Wanted His Money's Worth. Customer—I say, Mr. Barber, I don't hear your scissors at work on my hair. Barber (apologetically)—There is very little hair on your head, sir. Customer—That makes no difference. I pay my money and I want you to rattle the scissors on the bald place just the same as if I had hair on it.

Never Again. "Only once have I spoken crossly to my wife," said a man to an intimate friend. "Indeed!" remarked the latter in some surprise.

"Yes," said the first speaker, rather ambiguously; "once was quite enough for me."—Exchange.

THE TAMING OF A SHREW

A Case in Which Shakespeare's Method Failed.

"I'm afraid," said my friend, Peter Bliss, "that the girl I'm going to marry is a shrew."

"You are Pete, and she is Katherine. Why not try Petruchio's plan?" "Who was Petruchio?"

"A character in Shakespeare's play of 'The Taming of the Shrew.' He pretended to be fiercer than his wife, Katherine, and in this way brought her under subjection."

"That's not a bad idea." "The next time I saw Peter Bliss was at the club. His wife was in the country, and he was living a bachelor's life. I went up to him and offered my hand, which he took coolly."

"What's the matter, old man?" "Didn't it work?" "Oh, yes, it worked, but in a different way from the play."

"We had been married a week," he said, "and returned from our wedding trip. I got down that play you told me about and read it. The first thing that Petruchio did to show his spunk was to complain at dinner that the meat was not properly cooked and send it away. I suppose this was to starve his wife into subjection. Well, I concluded to try the same scheme. At our first meal I flourished the carving knife and cried out that the meat was burned and not fit to eat."

"Bridget," I yelled, "take away this meat, and the next time you roast a piece of beef in this house don't cook it all day!"

"With this I got up from the table and went out, slamming the door. 'I didn't go home till late, because I wanted to give Kate time to think over what a terrible fellow I was and make up her mind to smooth me down gently. When I went up stairs I found that she had gone off into the guest room to sleep, leaving me out in the bedroom to rave in as much as I liked. Although I was disappointed that she had not received me humbly after the outbreak and endeavored to pacify me, it was plain that she was afraid of me, and this was so much to the good. I didn't sleep very well and the next morning went down to breakfast feeling much in need of a good cup of coffee. Entering the dining room, I was surprised to see no cloth on the table. What I did see was a note from Kate saying that as the servant had departed bag and baggage the day before there would be no meat served in the house for the present. She (Kate) had gone to her mother's for breakfast and I could get mine where I liked."

"The result of the first move was not quite satisfactory. I didn't seem to have terrified my wife, and I had been the means of losing a very good servant. The truth is that I didn't have the heart to go any further. Nevertheless, after I had got a miserable cup of coffee at a restaurant I didn't dare to come here for fear of having to answer questions. I went back home and sitting at my wife's writing desk, wrote her a note directing her to return to the house, find a servant and behave herself. I sent it by a messenger, directing that the answer be brought to me at the office. I was afraid I wouldn't get an answer, but I did. My wife informed me that she had been the cause of the servant leaving she would expect me to secure another, when she would go home at once."

"There was nothing to do but hunt the intelligence offices, question girls and engage one. I went through a lot of them, selected the best of the lot and hired her, but she never appeared. Then I went through the terrible work a second time, with the same result. The third girl I engaged appeared, but while waiting for me to get home the servant next door told her what a frightful temper I had, and she told me when I came she had decided that she did not want to stay."

"Meanwhile I had not sent a word to my wife, hoping that my silence would trouble her. I resolved now to write her that she was leaving work to me that really belonged to her and that it was her duty to come home and attend to the servant matter herself. I was surprised to receive a very kind note in reply, saying that I was quite right. She was the proper person to engage a girl and she would gladly do so provided the girl was not to be treated as the last one had been."

"What I had to do in order to return to comfort was to make a simple promise not to make an ass of myself again and all would be well, but this was surrender, and I assumed that it meant living under subjection for the rest of my life. However, it was the only thing to do, and when I did it I apologized handsomely, adding that I had made the experiment of living without her, but had found she was not only necessary to run the house, but it was desolate without her."

"I got no reply to the note, but when I went home at dinner time my wife met me at the door, threw her arms about me and made me happy as a king. The servant I had abused was cooking a dinner, and the house was in perfect order. Kate has since given me my way all I have wanted."

"It's my opinion about women," added Peter, "that to have your own way with them you've first got to make a complete surrender. Then you can do what you like."

HARVESTING CORN FOR MAKING SILAGE

Grain Should Not Be Cut Until Kernels Are Glazed.

It is of great importance to know at what stage corn should be cut to secure the best results, writes W. H. Jenkins in Country Gentleman. Nutrient is stored up in the corn plant rapidly as it approaches maturity.

When the corn is harvested it contains but eight-tenths of a ton of dry matter per acre, or only one-fifth of what it contains when fully ripe. When in the milk it contains nearly three times as much dry matter as when fully tasseled.

Only about seventeen days are occupied in passing from the milk to the glazing stage, yet in this time there is an increase in the dry matter of one and three-tenths tons per acre. This shows the great advantage of letting the corn stand until the kernels are glazed. After this period the increase in dry matter is but slight.

Corn should not be cut until the ears are out of the milk and most of the kernels glazed and hard. In case the weather has been so hot and dry that the lower leaves have been dried, the corn could be cut before the ears are quite so far advanced. Much ripeness will keep at the bottom of the silo better than at the top because of the greater pressure, which excludes the air more completely.

Though corn is the most important it is by no means the only silage crop. Legumes, cereal hays, roots and sugar beet pulp are all used for silage purposes. The great superiority of corn over roots as a silage crop in this country has resulted in discouraging the growing of mangelwurzels and the like for this purpose.

Feeding the Chicks. Protein is needed to produce feathers, flesh and eggs. Since feathers and flesh are produced before eggs, it is necessary to feed the birds a great deal of food rich in protein to increase the production of eggs. Wheat, insects or meat, meal, oats and such feeds are needed to provide protein.

Remedy For Muscle Cramps. It often happens that the dairy cow suffers from cramps of the muscles, especially of the neck and sometimes of the hind legs. This can be overcome by giving an ounce of bromide of potassium in the bran wash twice each day for ten days.
