JOLTS AND JINGLES By Ad Brown

While we are boosting for La Follette for president, still we have an idea that were he elected he would put an editorial column in the Congressional Record.

We read that George, the human leopard, broke into the sidewalk box office and was shot on the spot. It is no doubt foolish curiosity but we would like to know which spot.

A Danbury, Conn., man went to sleep with his head on the streetcar tracks. Probably the only way he could make the dinged thing stop at his corner.

Rocketfeller says a porter in a store gave him his oil refining idea. That's interesting, but what did John D. give the porter?

Old man Grouch says its getting time for him to begin a profound study on what he is going to be thankful for on Thanksgiving.

A dispatch tells of a man who carried a friend six miles. Many another man has carried a friend six years and the fact remains unheralded.

An easy way to make money would be to sell blank pieces of paper to aviators for air maps.

Gaby Deslys can't sing, can't dance and can't act but New York people are crowding into the theatre to see her. And yet those same people refer to everyone outside New York as provincial.

A new exhibition building in New York is to have a vaudeville stage at one end of a swimming pool. A fine idea if the audience will only have courage enough to throw some of the actors in the tank.

Lost we forget this name stunt, at Marshalltown, Iowa, a kettle of lard was thrown on a baker named Soakup.

An Oklahoma judge ruled that a pony is a horse. He probably knows it isn't a schooner.

CLINTON C. SCOTT A Tribute.

Clinton C. Scott, who passed away on October 13th, was born at Quincy, Michigan, thirty-nine years ago. His early life was spent in the southern states, but he received the education, which fitted him for his life's work, in the schools of Iowa.

THE EL CAMINO REAL

SHAKING hands across the border, over a hundred citizens of Jackson county, Oregon, and Siskiyou county, California, met Monday with the California State Highway Commission, which is selecting a route for "El Camino Real," the $18,000,000 highway California is to build across the state from south to north.

In many respects the occasion is a notable one. It is the first effort made by the two states at cooperative road work. Jackson county promised to meet California and continue the great highway through the county. From here, Josephine will carry on the work and the other counties farther north. But Jackson county, having arranged preliminaries, is in a position to act, and this fact, more than any other, will be the deciding feature in the location of the highway.

Many are the arguments presented in behalf of the various routes regarding the location of this greatest of American highways, but none appeals more strongly than its immediate continuation to the north. The coast route and the Modoc desert route end at the state border. This central route will be at once continued to its eventual terminus, Alaska.

Time was, and not many years ago, when Californians heaped ridicule upon Oregonians. The mossback tendency of the "web-feet," the reactionary, unprogressive character of the population, subjected the Oregonian to reproach whenever he visited the more progressive state to the south. Farm laborers from Oregon concealed their origin when seeking labor in Siskiyou and other California counties. They were ashamed of it.

But the shoe is on the other foot now. Oregon, at least the Rogue River valley, has progressed at such a rapid pace in the past few years, has developed with such speed that California, at least northern California, has fallen far behind. California towns that for years looked down upon their little Oregon sisters across the border, now have to look up. In city building, in country development, southern Oregon is now a long lead over northern California.

There are more mossbacks in northern California today than in southern Oregon. Isolation makes the mossback. Travel, seeing the world, contact with others, cures him. The influx of progressive people from elsewhere, which changed the situation in southern Oregon, will alter it in northern California and soon the mossback will be a curiosity in both sections. Such gatherings as that at Coles hasten the day.

Oregon should follow California's example and appropriate several millions to continue "El Camino Real" through the state. Should it so do, some of the many millions tourists spill into the lap of California each year will find its way to Oregon. There is no reason why Oregon should not follow California's lead and capitalize its greatest resources—climate and scenery.

the dispossession of the Spaniards, but also the subduing of the various insurrecto Philippine tribes. Entering the volunteer army as a soldier in the ranks, he soon rose to positions of trust and importance. Being an unusually brilliant linguist, he was transferred as interpreter to General Fred Grant and remained in this capacity until 1901. His remarkable ability as an interpreter has been commented upon by various officers of the U. S. army. Shortly after arriving in the Philippines, he mastered Tagalog and many of the other native dialects. He also became a master of Chinese and Japanese, and it has been said of him that he spoke Cantelese quite as fluently as the Chinese natives.

After three years of volunteer service, he returned with his regiment to the United States, but immediately joined the Third U. S. Infantry with the rank of first sergeant. In 1901, he was discharged from the army by favor. He was too valuable a man to be kept in the ranks, and those who knew him best felt that his services toward humanity would be far more valuable in the new fields created for him. Accordingly he was transferred to the bureau of education, Insular Service, and remained in active work until 1909. Although, from the very first, he was given a position requiring a great deal of executive ability, he was soon made chief clerk, serving under Dr. David P. Barrows, who was director of the bureau of education at that time, and now a dean in the university of California. It may be said that many of the important details, which were most necessary to the welfare of the bureau, were worked out and put into effect by Mr. Scott. It was here that he demonstrated his ability to organize.

On November 7, 1904, he was married to Miss Anabel Read, at the home of Dr. Barrows, in the city of Manila. Mrs. Scott was then, and for several years afterwards, a teacher of English in the school of commerce.

The many years of hard service both as a soldier and an officer in the bureau of education told on Mr. Scott's health, and in October, 1909, he came to the Rogue river valley in search of a home, and with the hope that he would recover the health which he had lost in the service of his country. But, unfortunately, he had waited too long, and after two years of silent, uncomplaining suffering, he passed away, leaving his sorrowing wife and a multitude of friends to mourn his death. Mr. Scott was no ordinary man. He was a man of deep learning and with an alaytical mind much above the average. His enthusiasm for work and study was boundless, yet with that unselfishness so characteristic of the man. He never thought of himself, but rather of what he could do for others. On coming to the Rogue river valley his worth was immediately recognized, and he not only became a director of the Rogue River Fruit and Produce association, but also the secretary-treasurer to the board. Those of the board who worked with him will feel very keenly his absence from their midst, as his advice and help, coupled with the keenest judgment, was always sought. Only a day before he passed away, he was working out plans which would tend to make the work of the association more effective. It would be hard to enumerate the many phases of his wide range of thought. He was deeply interested, not only in the philosophy of life, but in the more abstruse side of speculative philosophy. He was a student of philosophy, not for philosophy's sake, but rather for its application to humanity. He believed in man's humanity to man, and demonstrated it in his every day life. He had solved for himself the ethical code to which he strictly adhered. His ideas of eternity and the Great Unknown were those not made for him by others, but worked out after years of careful thought and study. He was satisfied with the conclusions he had drawn, and in taking leave of this earth he did so, calmly, peacefully and resignedly. "Peace to this just man's memory—let it grow Greener with years, and blossom through the flight Of ages; let the mimic canvas show His calm benevolent features; let the light Stream on his deeds of love, that shunned the sight Of all but Heaven, and, in the book of fame, The glorious record of his virtues write. And hold it up to men, and bid them claim A palm like his, and catch from him the hallowed flame." P. J. O'GAR.

Tacoma Wants Game. TACOMA, Wn., Oct. 17.—Because of lack of facilities in either Seattle or Portland to accommodate the crowds expected at the annual Washington-Oregon football game on November 4, Tacoma men are working to bring the game to the stadium here, which will accommodate 30,000 people.

Graduate Manager Zednick of the University of Washington said last night that he would be in favor of the change unless the Multnomah Athletic Club of Portland would enlarge its seating capacity.

NEW TRIBE OF INDIANS FOUND

SEATTLE, Wn., Oct. 17.—Running into a new and strange colony of Indians on Hooper Bay, after buffeting Bering Sea for five weeks in efforts to land safely with a teachers colony and supplies for a government school, was the fate of the power schooner Bender Brothers which has reached Seattle.

On board when the vessel left in June were Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, engaged as school teachers for the Indians at Hooper Bay. There were groups of Indians, naked and with their bodies covered with seal oil. They fled at the approach of Mr. Richardson and it was with difficulty that he induced them to approach near enough to exchange signs.

The Bender Brothers finally effected a landing and Mr. and Mrs. Richardson were left to enlighten the natives.

THE ISIS THEATRE EXTRAORDINARY ATTRACTION THE GREAT MORIUS TRIO Burlesque Boxing and Heavy-weight Lifting and Burlesque Wrestling Here is truly a wonderful act of strength, agility and skill, nothing ever seen like it in the history of Medford. See the death-defying, dare-devil trick performed by Sam Morris. Just imagine a human being allowing the largest automobile in town to run over him with nothing to protect himself with but his enormous strength. This wonderful trick is performed in front of the theatre every evening at 7 o'clock, and it's only a starter of the many hazardous ones performed on the inside by this trio. Their burlesque boxing is a big scream from start to finish. Don't fail, by all means, to take in this wonderful act.
