STARS AND STRIPES ORDERED FROM CITY

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—High feeling over the recent reciprocity is believed today to be responsible for the ordering for the American flag out of Toronto, Canada's second city. Censors have notified every picture theater in the city to remove the stars and stripes from their buildings and no films portraying the flag may be shipped to Toronto from the United States.

Motion picture exchanges here today intimated that they will ask Washington to demand an investigation.

100 MEN BURIED; BURNING TO DEATH

ROME, Oct. 21.—With no hope of rescue, 100 men, entombed in a burning sulphur mine in Trabonella, Sicily, are meeting an awful death today.

All attempts at rescue were abandoned after two were burned to death in an endeavor to save their comrades.

REDMOND, Ore.—Thirty horses are here today and nine are expected before the opening of a racing meet that will be held here for three days beginning October 20. The horses here now have been racing on the Oregon circuit.

CECIL LEON HAS PRAISE FOR FANS

Says Monument Should Be Erected to the Man Who Makes the Great National Game Possible—Sings a Song "He's a Fan, Fan, Fan."

(By Cecil Leon.)

At this stage of the baseball season when everybody is excited and everybody is figuring on chances of the Giants and the Athletics winning the pennant, I want to say one word for the man who really makes baseball what it is, the man who backs the game to the absolute limit, the man who has made the game popular and who is its chief support.

I mean the fan, the good, faithful fan, steady always present fan.

Newspaper writers, magazine writers, photographers and artists have written and pictured the various heroes of the diamond, but most of them have neglected to mention the fan. Yet everybody knows that it is the fan alone that makes the game possible. If it were not for the fan, there would be no game. There are thousands of people who are interested in baseball and who read stories of the games in the newspapers and occasionally attend a game when they are not too busy about something else, but it is the real dyed in the wool fan, the man who would no more think of missing a game than he would think of missing his dinner, that really makes the game what it is today.

A fan is not merely an enthusiast. Not by any means. President Taft is a baseball enthusiast, but he is not a fan. The real fan is the man who goes to every game, day by day, whether his favorite team is winning or losing, he who sits in the bleachers and makes more noise than a steam calliope in a circus parade, the man who knows every player by his first name and knows his record and batting average and all the pleasant and unpleasant things about him. He yells encouragement when he thinks it necessary and yells condemnation when the player does not come up to his idea of what a player should do. He must be a master of the baseball slang and have imagination enough to invent new words when the old ones are inadequate. He must be cheering, sarcastic, cynical or humorous, as the occasion demands and above all things, he must know the game down to its final points. Without a fan the game would die. I number a score of great ball players among my personal friends and there is not one of them who does not tell me that the fan is the chief encouragement for the player.

The ball players learn to know the fan, not only by his name, not by sight possibly, but by their voices and their encouragement or their criticism counts with the player every time. One of the well known league players told me that there is one fan in a certain city where he plays who is more responsible for the position the player now holds than he is himself. They have never met but the player never steps up to the plate that the fan does not yell encouragement at him, and the player exerts himself to the utmost because he does not want to disappoint his faithful, but unknown friend or advisor. There are hundreds of such instances and they do not apply only to the star players of the big leagues. Even the brush leagues and sand lot players have their fans who are just as enthusiastic and just as earnest as are the fans that have made the Cubs and Tigers pennant winners. The fan is not local, he is a national institution. Yet the fan has been neglected, he has never received his just dues. In the song, "He's a Fan, Fan, Fan," which I sing in "Bright Eyes" which plays at the Medford Theatre Tuesday, Oct. 21st, I have tried to pay a little tribute to the neglected character. I try to give an imitation of him as I have seen him and dozens of baseball players have told me that I succeed. He is a difficult character to portray, but I have made a special study of him and besides I am a near fan myself. But the song does not represent the height of my ambition to give a fan the fame he deserves. I believe that the baseball players of each city in the big leagues should erect a monument to the fan, the faithful follower of the game.

In New York there is a monument representing the ball player, but no one seems to have a thought for the poor fan and he certainly deserves that much recognition.

The people of this city should buy "Made in Oregon" goods from the local merchants whenever the price and quality are equal to Eastern made goods.

War Declared

Catarrh Germs Must Be Conquered or Health Will Be Destroyed.

If you have catarrh you must vanquish an army of persistent, destructive microbes before you can get rid of it.

You might as well choose your weapons, declare war and annihilate this army of catarrh germs right now. Stomach dosing don't kill them; neither will sprays or douches. HYOMEI, a pleasant, antiseptic, germ destroying air breathed over the entire membrane will put catarrh germs out of business in short order. HYOMEI (pronounce it High-ome) is guaranteed by Chas. Strong to end catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, coughs, colds and croup, or money back. If you own a little HYOMEI hard rubber pocket inhaler you can get a separate bottle of HYOMEI for only 50 cents. If you haven't an inhaler buy a complete outfit that only costs $1.00.
