BETTER BUY THAT 'XMAS GIFT NOW

Only Eighteen Days Remain in Which to Do Your Shopping—Last Day Before Christmas is Sunday—Better Get Busy Now.

Only eighteen days remain in which to attend to Christmas shopping.

There is a united request from the merchants that shopping be done as early as possible, so as to avoid the eleventh-hour rush.

Despite warnings, however, December 23, which will be the last day for making purchases before Christmas, will be marked by the usual rush crush and loss of time.

Eighteen business days slip away rapidly, and before the neglectful shopper realizes it, Christmas will be at hand. Any one who has waited until the last day to prepare a list of gifts and then wanders from store to store making purchases knows that this trial robe Christmas of its pleasure and makes the spirit of giving a torment and agony. After one such experience the neglectful shopper declares that next year the shopping will be done long before the rush, but next time the same delay occurs and the resolution goes to smash, along with the patience, temper and good nature.

To avoid these tribulations, shop early. If a person intends giving only one present, do it now. The necktie for father or the rocking horse for the son and heir can be bought now as well as December 23. One phase of the holiday shopping which the public gives little thought to is the wear and tear on the sales-girls. The last week of the rush the girls cannot give the time to customers that they can earlier, for they are worn out and tired. It is easier to make selections now than later before the stocks are depleted, as the assortment is larger and gives a variety from which to choose.

The day before Christmas is Sunday, and there are three other Sundays to cut down the number of business days. With today practically gone, there are actually but eighteen days for handling the holiday stampede.
