CARE OF THE COMPLEXION
(By Madame Quivilla)

(Note—Madame Quivilla will be glad to answer any questions pertaining to womanly beauty. Personal replies will be given if a stamped and self-addressed envelope is enclosed.)

To look one's best is not vanity; it is self-respect.

There is no single beauty which possesses a stronger power of attraction than a clear complexion of delicate tint and texture. It is the natural externalization of inward health and physical purity, and is so great a charm that it quite overcomes any minor irregularities of feature. A vesture of health-glowing, luminous flesh is to the beauty of the human body what Carrara marble is to the statue. It is nature's expression of absolute purity in structure and com-pound.

There is no texture under heaven so transcendently exquisite as healthy human flesh, with its delicate, transparent covering, revealing a ruddy glow beneath, like suffused rose tints in apple blossoms. This perfect tissue is capable of revealing in the face every emotion, from the ashen pallor of fear to the rosy flush of delight. This inexpressible charm, a brilliant complexion, is finer than faultless features alone.

A clear skin is a healthy skin, and a healthy skin is a beautiful one. Every complexion specialist will testify that half the complexion ills of woman-kind are due to carelessness and neglect of one or all of the hygienic laws. For its perfect health the skin needs such a measure of external cleanliness as will remove the wastes that come to the surface.

A sudden chill acts as a blight upon the skin and the two extremes of sozzling the face a half dozen times daily with cold water and of scrupulously protecting it from water are almost equally harmful to any skin. That the famous beauties never bathe their face with God's most superfluous and wholesome gift is only a pure bit of fiction. Upon investigation I find that they thoroughly cleanse the face with warm water and an expressly prepared almond meal at night, refreshing the face again with only warm (not hot) water in the morning. If exposed to dust or dirt from driving it is removed with a pure emollient face cream. The face is more exposed to dirt during the day, and it is of the utmost importance that the coating of impurities should not be left to obstruct the pores during sleep, when the exhalations through them need to be perfect.

After this cleansing bath the skin should not be exposed immediately to wind or sudden change of temperature, so night is the most convenient time. A face cream should never be left on the face upon retiring, as it prevents the pores from doing their natural work of throwing off impurities and prevents it from assimilating the fresh air which it positively must have to be translucent.

Most strenuous are the arguments advanced against the use of water, claiming that it robs the skin of its natural oil. Of course, caustic and impure soaps are injurious, but no woman who has any respect for her complexion uses such, and their substitute I will take up later.

These people forget that the function of the sebaceous glands is continually to provide this oil, and if that which is exuded upon the surface is left to dry and clog the pores, the ducts are stopped up and the function arrested.

Cold water has no affinity for dirt and oil, even with the aid of soap, and tends to contract all the ducts and glands, making it difficult for them to yield their contents. Most of the soil which such a bath removes is found deposited on the wiping towel. It is the removal of the oil of the skin and its renewal that are necessary for its health and beauty, and the warm bath is the only thoroughly efficacious means of insuring this.

The night toilet is one of the most important measures toward preserving a beautiful skin, as well as improving a poor one or healing and curing a diseased one. The very common omission of it is one of the causes of unsightly comedones and acne, oth of which are pre-eminent diseases of uncleanness, external and internal. First cleanliness, and last cleanliness!

Yours for charming womankind,
MADAME QUIVILLA.
