The Rogue River Electric company has men at work removing the electric light wires and poles from East Main street, this removal work having been made possible by the installation of the new cluster street lighting system. A few Western Union telegraph poles will still remain standing in the streets after the light poles have been taken down, but these should be removed also, and probably will be. There is no good reason why a single pole should be left standing on this principal business street after sufficient time has been given for their removal.

Several of the new cluster lights have already burned out. They ought not to have done this so quickly after installation. In all instances the burned out globes are those standing upright. One dead globe will kill the beautiful effect produced by a dozen live ones.

CARTER'S VIRGINIA WARBLERS.

Carter's Virginia Warblers is one of the oldest companies before the public today. They were organized in 1893 under the management of Walter R. Carter. This company consists of four male and two female voices carefully selected and whose ability has been put to the severest test. All are thorough and accomplished musicians who know how to sing the old plantation melodies and camp meeting favorites of years ago.

Nolan T. Washington is at the head of this famous troupe of Jubilee Warblers. As a whistler and bird imitator he is unexcelled by any one in either theatrical or vaudeville circles.

This company of excellent colored singers will appear at the Medford opera house on Tuesday evening, December 26. The admission price is 50 cents.
