CHOC SOLDIER GREAT SUCCESS

Julian Johnson, Veteran Dramatic Critic of the Los Angeles Times, Has Strong Words of Praise for Melodic Satire.

Julian Johnson, the veteran dramatic critic of the Los Angeles Times, whose vitriolic pen has put more than one production out of business, has nothing but kind words to say of the "Chocolate Soldier," due to appear here soon. In a recent issue of the Times he says, in part: "Those who remember that 'The Chocolate Soldier' was here last year need have no fear of the proverbial drop-out in the 'second company' of the 1912 production is even more brilliant and dashing than that of 1911.

"The Majestic theater rang with applause last night, as applause has not been given since the departure of the Lambardi Opera company, and throughout the rendition was marked by a musicianly precision and wholesome freshness and enthusiasm that were inspiring. "De Norvellis, the conductor, a man of venerable appearance, with snowy hair and beard, combines an ardor of 21 with the sagacity and studious reserve of—well, whatever his age is.

"It was an unusual scene at the end of the second act, which finale is none other than the familiar 'My Hero' song. The audience was unanimous in tremendous and prolonged applause, the curtain went up and down, and finally Henry Coote, the tenor of the company, stepped to the footlights and began applauding the now-very-much-confused conductor. The other members of the company joined him, and then the audience, which was not slow in recognizing his worth, forced him to take repeated bows.

"The satiric plot of 'The Chocolate Soldier,' a Shavian transcription, and the really magnificent music with which ingenious Oscar Straus has surrounded it, has been dwelt on at length in many previous issues. There are spots in which the action lags—in the middle of the second act, even to dreariness—but in the main the piece is so far above the ordinary that it really may be called one of the two or three most remarkable works of its class during the past decade.

Mrs. Abbott, "Special Faults—Disobedience, Obstinate, Lack of Self Control, Dishonesty, Lying, Discrimination as to Seriousness, How far is Imagination Responsible for Falsehood?"
