"As I have stated before just as soon as the water in the river goes down sufficiently to allow work to proceed I intend to install a modern concrete fishway at the dam and do away once and for all with the trouble arising from the fact that the fishway at the dam is not doing its work."

"While wood fishways are a success while they are in working order the first high water always takes them out. I intend to correct this matter with a permanent concrete fishway."

Progressive Aggressive OUR FIRST REPLY The question we were asked was—What is catarrh? Is it curable? What is the ordinary preventive treatment in early life? What are the symptoms? This is a very broad question and we will not attempt to give in full detail all the answer, but will try to systematically outline the essentials that will be needed by the ordinary individual and we might add that it will take us more than one issue to supply the information. CATARRH is defined in the medical dictionary as an inflammation of a mucous membrane, especially of the respiratory passages of the head and throat, attended by a discharge of mucus. (Lippincott) The Standard dictionary adds that in the United States such a definition as above given is meant to apply that it is associated with a chronic inflammation, but that in England it is associated with an ordinary influenza or cold. The question then as to what is Catarrh differs in various countries, owing in part to the classification of the condition and also to the time as to when a "bad cold" ceases to be such and becomes the so-called "disease." We in this country have been for the past few years trying to educate the PUBLIC to the one fact that the difference existing between a so-called continuous cold and the more common term of Catarrh is a difference in name only as the morbid conditions are identical. This does not imply that one who blows their nose has Catarrh, but that one who has an over secretion of mucus or other discharge from the nose has the trouble and that it then exists in the chronic state. The next question asked—Is it curable? The answer most decidedly, YES. The reason that we give this so emphatic is that this is a question we are called upon to answer every day and we have no fear of contradiction at all. We want to add that we have not attempted any scientific classification of the different forms of this condition as we do not want to lead the laity into a strictly scientific discussion but want to say it all the plainest possible way.
