POULTRY KEEPING PROFIEABLE BUSINESS

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Corvallis, Ore., April 20.—"There has been an enormous increase in the production of eggs and poultry in the state in the past two years, but in spite of this the demand has far exceeded the supply, and prices are still as high as ever," said Prof. James Dryden of the Oregon Agricultural college in discussing the object of the present tour of the demonstration car sent out over the Southern Pacific lines by the college.

"If the farmers of Oregon would keep, on an average, 100 hens instead of about 50, it would shut out the imports and add $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year to the wealth of the state.

"The purpose of the demonstration car is to stimulate a greater production of poultry and eggs. The quickest and best way is to increase the flocks of the farmers rather than to have poultry-keepers start large egg farms. The demand cannot be met by the establishment of large, exclusively poultry farms. If the general farmer goes out of the egg producing business there will soon be an egg famine—possibly a serious financial panic.

"Though there are opportunities for profit along special lines in poultry-keeping, the market for specialties is limited, and it would be folly to advise everyone to go into special lines. I am free to confess that we have kept more people out of the exclusive poultry business than have gone into it as an exclusive business. I have received great numbers of letters during the past year from all parts of the state as well as from other states, in which the writers stated that they were going into the poultry business on a large scale, and a large majority of them said they knew nothing of the business. Our plain duty was to advise caution. If every one of them had gone into the business as they intended and invested their all in it, it is safe to say that there would have been thousands of dollars lost in every county of the state, and the poultry business would have received a black eye.

"Poultry-keeping is not a difficult business unless we make it so. If conducted along sane, common-sense lines, there is profit in it. The two points on which special emphasis is laid in the demonstration car are feeding for eggs and housing. Egg rations are on display, feeding charts show results of experiments, breeding charts show results of breeding for eggs, different grades and qualities of eggs are exhibited, marketing possibilities are demonstrated, and the equipment for successful hatching and brooding of chicks is displayed. The walls of the car are covered with signs and charts containing lessons in practical poultry-keeping. "A knockdown" colony house is taken along and set up outside the car at each stop.

"While chickens may be made to do well in different houses, it may be said in favor of the colony system and free range that there is no noted poultry district in the United States where poultry-keeping has been permanently successful, where the colony system was not followed. The colony house, moreover, was the house used at the Oregon Experiment Station last year for the hens that made the highest egg records ever made in the United States so far as official or authentic record is concerned. The demonstrators on the car explain how those hens were housed and cared for, and answer any questions as to their feeding and treatment."

TITANIC CAPTAIN HAD NO LIFE BELT

NEW YORK, April 20.—Describing the scene of the Titanic's sinking, Wireless Operator McBride testified: "The last boat not ready for launching when the Titanic settled below the water, and it was washed overboard. I jumped for it. When the boat came to the surface it was overturned. Thirty-five or forty men clung to it, and I was the last one to get aboard.

"Dozens of others were swimming about the boat, begging to be let aboard. All wore lifebelts. They fought to get aboard but were not allowed to do so.

"The last I saw of Captain Smith was when he went overboard from the bridge. He jumped just as I reached the boat. He wore no life-belt.

"This was about five minutes before the last of the Titanic disappeared. Practically speaking, the captain sank with the vessel.

"The whole ship was under water almost to the funnels. Then the stern rose out of the water and she slid down, fore and after. There was little suction. I was swimming about 150 feet away when she sank and felt practically no suction."

did not copy it in my book, although I sent a copy to the headquarters on the bridge. Whether the captain received it or not I do not know. It told of three great bergs in certain latitude and longitude which I do not remember."

Distress Signals Unheeded.
Bride testified that the German liner Frankfurt was the first to answer the distress call, the Frankfurt's operator sent a message, asking: "What's the matter?" Phillips was indignant and seizing the key snapped out: "You damned fool!" Frankfurt asked: "Will we stand by?" Phillips gave the Titanic's position and asked for the Frankfurt's position. She refused to give it. Phillips tried several times to get her position, but she would not answer. Each time she answered "stand by" we heard nothing more of her."
