

MADERO SAYS AMERICA NOT VERY FRIENDLY

Attitude of Government Strained, Admits President of Southern Republic—Details of Rebel Plots Discussed by Executive.

Orozco Demanded $25,000 But Failed to Present Formal Claim Against Treasury.

MEXICO CITY, April 27.—That the attitude of the American government toward Mexico is not as friendly as formerly was admitted by President Francis I. Madero here today in a statement to the United Press in which he also outlined the causes which he says led General Pascual Orozco, the rebel chieftain, to foment the present revolution. In referring to the present attitude of the United States, Madero said:

"While I think the American government is friendly toward Mexico, I am persuaded that it is not so friendly as it was a few months ago."

Orozco a Traitor.

After declaring that he did not believe that the Mexican people would be disloyal to a constituted government and follow the leadership of General Orozco, whom, he said, had proved an ingrate and traitor, Madero said:

"General Orozco angered me last summer when he sought my advice regarding the advisability of becoming a candidate for the governorship of Chihuahua. I told him that he was not old enough under the state law. Orozco is only 29 and the law requires that one must be 30 before he becomes available for the office of governor. In my opinion this caused him to foment the uprising."

Demanded Blackmail.

"While he was in Mexico City, Orozco demanded that the government pay him $25,000. I knew that a similar sum had been paid him under the De La Barra government and I felt that no public money was due him. But he insisted, and I realized that peace in northern Mexico was worth much more to the country than this amount. I decided that the nation could easily sacrifice that amount to hold Orozco in restraint. I told him that if he present a claim for this as personal damages sustained during the overthrow of Diaz I would guarantee him the money. He refused to present a formal claim and I refused to pay without it."

For the purpose of demonstrating the value of dynamite applied to agriculture A. L. Jones of San Francisco, representing the Du Pont Powder company is in Medford for a visit of two or three weeks. Mr. Jones is arranging several demonstrations showing that powder applied to land before trees are planted is very beneficial.

CLUB SEEKING NEW FACTORIES

The Medford Commercial club will donate a site to any person, company or corporation who will establish thereon a modern, up-to-date pickle factory and fruit canning company combined.

This proposition presents the best and largest business opening on the Pacific coast today. From San Diego to the south to Nome in the north, all this vast empire of the west, the people are consuming hundreds of tons of pickles, canned and bottled fruits and vegetables, that are brought here from the east. Why should this condition exist? Rogue river valley in a small radius about Medford, can produce a great abundance of cucumbers, gherkins, tomatoes, peppers, onions, celery, cauliflower, cabbage, radishes, sweet corn, peas, asparagus, beans, etc., etc., besides a large amount of apples, pears, peaches, plums, prunes, nectarines, apricots, almonds, and other fruits.

The following are among the many business concerns of the eastern states that send train loads of such productions to the west annually, via H. J. Heinz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa. ("57 Varieties.")

Geo. A. Bayle, St. Louis, Mo., pickles, etc.

The Empire Packing company, Greeley, Col., canned corn, etc.

The Mt. Pleasant (Pa.) Canning company, canned corn, etc.

Beech Nut Packing company, Canajoharie, N. Y., bacon and beans, tomato sauce, etc.

H. Hohenadel, Jr., Rochelle, Ill., canned fruits, etc.

Lutz & Schramm, Pittsburg, Pa., pickles, chow chow, etc.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago, Ill., pickles, etc.

Joseph Campbell, Camden, N. J., canned fruit, jellies, etc., and a number of others who fill our stores with their products.

We not only pay the farmers of these various localities for producing these things, and the manufacturers of the eastern states for preparing them for use, but we also pay exorbitant freight rates in getting them to this coast.

The tide of emigration to the west will not always continue. The limit is about reached, and when the Panama canal is completed the Pacific coast states will soon become densely populated. We should look to the great future that is now dawning upon us.

Medford is a city of over ten thousand inhabitants. It is one of the most progressive small cities on the Pacific coast. It is in the center of the orchard and farm district of southern Oregon. It is the place to locate a large business along these lines.

The Commercial club invites investigation by the business world of this promising field for investment. It will lend a helping hand to any man who comes with sufficient capital to cover the whole field.

TO SHOW FISH IN VARIOUS STAGES

Co-operating with the United States bureau of fisheries, the Mail Tribune has placed an aquarium in the show window of its office on North Fir street in which will be shown from time to time different varieties of native fish in various stages of growth. The first fry are expected early next week. Supt. O'Malley of the bureau writes as follows:

"I have instructed Mitchell, foreman at Elk Creek hatchery to send down in the neighborhood of 500 young chinook salmon of the youngest which we have at the station to put into your tank. This will give the people of Medford an opportunity of seeing the fish in its younger stages and realize how tender a morsel it really is.

"These fish can be fed on beef liver when they are old enough which will be when they begin to swim up around the tank. The liver should be ground until it is very fine and put in the tank only in small quantities four or five times a day and only enough so they will eat it up clean and it would be well to draw the water off in the tank every morning or evening and scrub it out well with a sponge so as to keep it in first class condition.

"I will arrange, the first time I come down from here to bring down some brook and some black spotted trout. I have also suggested to the boys at the station to secure some small steelheads and cutthroats in that section which will be a good education for every one so that they will know one fish from the other and be informed as to what they are really catching from time to time."

Referring to the labor problem, he said: "We can never get the type of constitutional legislation we desire as long as the bosses and professional politicians are in power."
