PUSHING TITANIC INQUIRY.

SENATOR WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH.

Where are the folk who have been saying the United States Senate is slow? They are not heard in public places to-day. One man has chased them away. That man is William Alden Smith, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who has made a record of which the Senate is proud. Through his efforts the world is learning officially how and why the Titanic went to the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean.

CONDITION OF MANY BODIES FORCED BURIAL

members of the crew, and we found it impossible to care for them. When we left Halifax we took all the embalming fluid we could find in the city. That was sufficient to care for only 70 bodies. I did not expect to find the corpses of so many victims. The undertaker we carried along did not think the bodies we buried at sea would keep more than three days and as we expected to be at sea for two weeks, we had to bury them. The Rev. Mr. Hind, an Episcopalian minister, officiated at the services.

Storm Comes Up

Captain Lardner continued: "Monday we found only 26 bodies. On Tuesday numerous bodies were sighted and we recovered ninety corpses before noon. Then a storm came up and we recovered only 29 more during the afternoon. "I found no two bodies together, all were floating separately. I saw no two clasped in each other's arms. At one place I saw bodies scattered on the surface of the sea, resembling sea gulls—the white ends of their life belts fluttering up and down. Many of them evidently were injured when the Titanic sank.

"Water sweeping the decks must have carried many of the victims against the stanchions and spars. All the bodies recovered wore lifebelts. They rode upright in the waves, the belts carrying them high above the water.

"On Wednesday we were in a heavy fog—with the wind blowing hard from the southwest.

"At midnight it eased up. Thursday we recovered 87 bodies. The cadetship Minia arrived Friday and we started for Halifax, having aboard all the corpses we could handle."

The Mackay-Bennett brought the effects and clothing of many of those buried at sea and the identity of a good many may be established in this way.

Death of Captain John S. Miller

Another one of Oregon's early day, noble, old pioneers and Indian fighters has answered the last roll call.

Captain John S. Miller was born in Clay county, Missouri, Dec. 25th, 1824. Died March 30th, 1912; age 87 years, 3 months and 5 days. He came overland across the plains with ox teams to Oregon Territory in 1846, and stopped near Oregon City. At that time there were but a few white settlers in the country but there were large numbers of native Indians, some of which were hostile and would murder and steal from the few white settlers at every favorable opportunity. These settlers had to protect themselves as best they could, for a federal government, up to that time and for several years after, had failed to give her subjects in Oregon protection of any kind. In those trying days John S. Miller was one who was ever ready to respond to the first call to protect life and property.

When the news of the murder by the Indians of Dr. Marcus Whitman, his wife and a number of others at the Whitman Mission in Walla Walla valley, November 29th, 1847, reached them, John S. Miller was one among the first who enlisted, under the provisional government of Oregon, to go and help to punish the Indians for the cruel murders they had committed. Shouldering his gun and blankets, he with others marched on foot two hundred and sixty miles to the scene of the massacre and there met and chastised the Indians like true and noble patriots. Later in 1852, he moved to Jackson county, Oregon in company with Captain B. B. Griffen. While on this trip he married one Captain Griffen's daughter, Miss Lydia. He settled in Jackson county on a farm but was ever ready to respond to any call to protect life and property against hostile Indians that were numerous at that time. He took an active part in the Indian war of 1853 and in October 1855, when there was a general outbreak of the Indians all over southern Oregon, he was among the first to enlist and served like a gallant soldier from the beginning to the end—more than seven months; a part of the time as first lieutenant and the remainder of the time as captain. The men under him loved and respected him. He never said "go on" but always said "come on, boys."

He was a cool, determined and courageous in battle but kind and good to his men. After this Indian war was over he was elected a member of the Oregon legislature where he acquitted himself in an honorable manner. After this he retired to his farm with his family where they lived happily until in 1871, his wife died. This seemed to discourage him so much that he could never muster courage to do much afterwards. They had six children, all of whom married and the last few years of his life he has lived with one or another of them. He was city marshal of Medford from 1885 to 1900. During his last illness he was at his own home on Applegate. He was sick for quite a while but he bore his sufferings without a murmur and passed away peacefully. He lived an honorable life, loved and respected by all who knew him; his earthly mission was filled.

"May he rest in peace on that happy shore

Where Indian wars and earthly cares are no more."

Respectfully,
JOHN HAILEY,
Boise, Idaho, April 18th, 1912.

Potato Doughnuts

(Recipe by Mrs. Helen Armstrong)
You will find these doughnuts both delicious and digestible; there's no "nightmare" or hard indigestion in them:
Cream three tablespoons of Cottoleone, add three-fourths cup of sugar, and three yolks of eggs well beaten with one white. Stir in one cupful of freshly mashed potato and one-fourth cup of milk. Sift two and one-half cups of flour with three teaspoons of baking powder, half a teaspoon each of salt and ground mace, also a little nutmeg, and add to first mixture, working in additional flour as necessary to handle lightly. Roll and cut all doughnuts before attending to the frying. Have Cottoleone three inches deep in kettle and test temperature with a piece of bread.
