

"MADE IN OREGON" CAMPAIGN TO EXTEND THE HOME MARKETS

Oregon Industries Contract for a Year's Display in the Mail Tribune With the Object of Inducing People to Keep $20,000,000 at Home.

Local Industries Should Be Given a Chance to Build Up Themselves and State by Local Patronage.

The Made in Oregon campaign to extend the home market for products of Oregon industries made its first appearance in the advertising columns of this paper Monday. A half page or more to appear once a week for a year has been contracted for by representative manufacturers and readers of this paper are requested to buy the Oregon products.

The slogan "Keep twenty millions at home that are now sent East," means a great deal to the home merchant, the home industry and the Oregon wage earner. It is interesting to know that Oregon industries and Oregon enterprises can be made highly successful if given an equal chance at Oregon patronage. The only line not purely manufacturing on this page is insurance and the amount of money sent out of the state for that purpose is appallingly large. The Oregon Life, with a record of $7,500,000 in policies written in seven years and only $38,000 losses is a record showing that the health, stability and prosperity of this state is without a parallel. The Pacific States company is an all-Oregon fire insurance company organized on the same conservative lines; and with the high character of Oregon people and the low fire risk is destined to be as great a career.

Wood manufacturing is naturally given the largest share of attention. Firms like the Central Door & Lumber company, and the Carman Manufacturing company build and equip interiors for business firms, banks, lodges, churches and club rooms. They construct art glass and metal work, marble and tiling. Oregon is a great furniture manufacturing state. The Kingerat chairs of the Oregon Chair company are found in the lobbies and parlors of the new Multnomah hotel. No finer chairs are made in the United States and no home or office is complete without one. R. Veal & Son of Albany make seventy styles of cheaper chairs and rockers. Their chairs are made from oak, ash, and maple grown in Oregon and there is little excuse for sending money for furniture to Michigan.

It is almost a crime against industrial Oregon to send money East for flour and cereal products. The Crown and Columbia Mills products should displace all Minneapolis flour now used in carloads by Oregon people. Albers Brothers Violet Oats—their mills using 400 carloads of Oregon white oats in a single month—surpass in quality any rolled oats made. Their pancake flour and the Columbia Wheat Flakes alone would keep $100,000 in Oregon if used by Oregon people.

Clothing manufacture is naturally one of the most important lines and strongly represented. With a number of the largest woolen mills on the coast, including a mohair mill, there is an increasing demand for Oregon-made clothing among the people of this state. The products of the Salem, Eugene and Brownsville woolen mills are made up into suits for the Bowman stores at Portland, Eugene, Marshfield. Clothing is made up from Oregon woolen manufactured by the Oregon City woolen mills and Fleischner, Mayer & Company. The mohairs made at Sellwood by the Multnomah Mohair company from the Angora goats grown to perfection in this state are fabrics that any man or woman in Oregon should be proud to wear.

It is estimated that a quarter of a million dollars are sent east each year for paints, wood fillers and stains that are manufactured here in Oregon. In this line are the products of the Oregon Wood Distilling company with its large plant at Linnton, where the fir stumps are thrown into retorts and cresosote and about thirty other chemical products are refined. This material forms the base of the Condor paints and should be used by Oregon home builders interested in Oregon payrolls.

By looking over the Made in Oregon page readers will find they can sleep on Oregon made beddings, eat Oregon made pickles and relishes, eat Oregon made crackers and wash them down with Oregon made beer as good as any beer made, count their money on an Oregon made cashier, listen to music on an Oregon made piano while smoking an Oregon made cigar.

There are special industries in Oregon that deserve special reference. How many know that the Bergman loggers' shoe has the highest reputation in that line of any shoe made in the United States if not in the world? That the Central Door and Lumber company makes plate glass mirrors as good as the finest imported? That Portland is one of the largest harness manufacturing cities in North America and that McMonies' gall-proof collar is one of the greatest humane inventions of the age? That the Swastika Macaroni factory puts out twenty kinds of noodles and alimentary pastes, the equal in quality of any imported products? That the Portland Cordage company has one of the largest payrolls in Portland and makes binding twine, wool twine and hop twine superior to the imported? Why not ask your dealer for the Oregon-made products? Do you not owe that to the home industry that in time makes a market for your product? Is not the home manufacturer who is nearest to the consumer compelled to keep up the quality of his product more than the Eastern manufacturer who is far from the market?

The answers to these questions are equally true of every line represented on this page. The same quality goes into the products of the Dwight-Edwards company, who import coffees in bulk from the plantations direct from all over the world. The products of the Union Meat company go direct to the consumers through the retailer who hears the slightest complaint as to quality. A soft drink called "R-Porter," made by the Puritan Manufacturing company, is displacing a great deal of the imported ginger ale and grape juice. It should be sold on all buffet and dining cars. It is made of pure fruit juice and distilled water and is displacing stronger beverages. The manufacturer of the Lionite Giant Powder near Portland, a safety and sanitary explosive that is displacing the more dangerous and nauseating dynamites, will save millions for Oregon in money and human life. Vitrified Sewer Pipe made in Oregon will interest every city in the state. A visit to the large plant of the Irwin-Hodson company at Portland, or the Willamette Pulp and Paper Mills at Oregon City would convince any one that there is little excuse for sending money out of Oregon for trifles like rubber stamps, celluloid buttons, lithographing or printing paper.

SENIORS TO TROD BOARDS TONIGHT

Thoroughness in small details is the watchword of the senior class in the putting on of their play, "The Merchant of Venice." Last night was the final rehearsal of the play before it is put on tonight, and every small detail was carefully watched. Portia, the leading lady of the play, will be well played by Miss Mame Deuel, who puts her whole soul into her part. Miss Ethel Eifert is an ideal Jessica and Miss Mildred Antle will appear at her best as Nerissa, the friend of Portia.

Among the boys who will appear are Paul Mac Donald as Antonio; Alton White as Bassanio, and Fletcher Ware as Shylock, and it is needless to say that these boys handle their parts to the best advantage.

Among the scenes of the play, the football field was an exciting scene of last night's dress rehearsal. The curtain goes up as the audience hears the umpire calling, "Second down, five yards to go," and when the curtain is up one sees a pile of boys, who quickly line up and go through two plays before the leader of the Medford team, Antonio, is knocked out.

This scene will be received very enthusiastically by the audience, as it thrills one to see the two teams crash headlong into each other. Launcelot Gobbo, the comedian of the play, is played by Mark Leonard, and he is some comedian, as every one knows that has been associated with him in any way. The play is essentially a comedy, with some very laughable scenes, and the seniors are sure that they are going to give every one their money's worth who come tonight.

FIX ELECTION DATE TONIGHT

The city council will meet in regular session this evening. The most important business to be discussed will be the city election, originally called for May 14, which is to be postponed to a later date in order that the bond issue to pay the city's share of a bridge over Bear creek may be also voted upon.
